A message was received from the President, by the hands of his Private Secretary, Mr. Josselyn; which was read as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

In obedience to the constitutional provision requiring the President from time to time to give to the Congress information of the state of the Confederacy and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient, I have to communicate that since my message at the last session of the Provisional Congress events have demonstrated that the Government had attempted more than it had power successfully to achieve. Hence, in the effort to protect by our arms the whole of the territory of the Confederate States, seaboard and inland, we have been so exposed as recently to encounter serious disasters. When the Confederacy was formed the States composing it were, by the peculiar character of their pursuits and a misplaced confidence in their former associates, to a great extent destitute of the means for the prosecution of the war on so gigantic a scale as that which it has attained. The workshops and artisans were mainly to be found in the Northern States, and one of the first duties which devolved upon this Government was to establish the necessary manufactories, and in the meantime to obtain by purchase from abroad, as far as practicable, whatever was required for the public defense. No effort has been spared to effect both these ends; and though the results have not equaled our hopes, it is believed that an impartial judgment will, upon full investigation, award to the various departments of the Government credit for having done all which human power and foresight enabled them to accomplish.

The valor and devotion of the people have not only sustained the efforts of the Government, but have gone far to supply its deficiencies.

The active state of military preparation among the nations of Europe in April last, the date when our agents first went abroad, interposed unavoidable delays in the procurement of arms; and the want of a navy has greatly impeded our efforts to import military supplies of all sorts.

I have hoped for several days to receive official reports in relation to our discomfiture at Roanoke Island and the fall of Fort Donelson. They have not yet reached me, and I am, therefore, unable to communicate to you such information of those events, and the consequences resulting from them, as would enable me to make recommendations founded upon the changed condition which they have produced. Enough is known of the surrender of Roanoke Island to make us feel that it was deeply humiliating, however imperfect may have been the preparations for defense. The hope is still entertained that our reported losses at Fort Donelson have been greatly exaggerated, inasmuch as I am not only unwilling but unable to believe that a large army of our people have surrendered without a desperate effort to cut their way through investing forces, whatever may have been their numbers, and to endeavor to make a junction with other divisions of the Army. But in the absence of that exact information which can only be afforded by official reports, it would be premature to pass judgment, and my own is reserved, as I trust yours will be, until that information is received. In the meantime strenuous efforts have been made to throw forward reinforcements to the armies at the positions threatened, and I can not doubt that the bitter disappointments we have borne, by nerving the people to still greater exertions, will speedily secure results more accordant with our just expectation and as favorable to our cause as those which marked the earlier periods of the war.

The reports of the Secretaries of War and the Navy will exhibit the mass of resources for the conduct of the war which we have been enabled to accumulate, notwithstanding the very serious difficulties against which we have contended.

They afford the cheering hope that our resources, limited as they were at the beginning of the contest, will during its progress become developed to such an extent as fully to meet our future wants.

The policy of enlistment for short terms, against which I have steadily contended from the commencement of the war, has, in my judgment, contributed in no immaterial degree to the recent reverses which we have suffered, and even now renders it difficult to furnish you an accurate statement of the Army. When the war first broke out many of our people could with difficulty be persuaded that it would be long or serious. It was not deemed possible that anything so insane as a persistent attempt to subjugate these States could be made, still less that the delusion would so far prevail as to give to the war the vast proportions which it has assumed. The people, incredulous of a long war, were naturally averse to long enlistments, and the early legislation of Congress rendered it impracticable to obtain volunteers for a greater period than twelve months. Now that it has become probable that the war will be continued through a series of years, our high-spirited and gallant soldiers, while generally reenlisting, are, from the fact of having entered the service for a short term, compelled in many instances to go home to make the necessary arrangements for their families during their prolonged absence.

The quotas of new regiments for the war, called for from the different States, are in rapid progress of organization. The whole body of new levies and reenlisted men will probably be ready in the ranks within the next thirty days. But, in the meantime, it is exceedingly difficult to give an accurate statement of the number of our forces in the field. They may, in general terms, be stated at four hundred regiments of infantry, with a proportionate force of cavalry and artillery, the details of which will be shown by the report of the Secretary of War. I deem it proper to advert to the fact that the process of furloughs and reenlistment in progress for the last month had so far disorganized and weakened our forces as to impair our ability for successful defense; but I heartily congratulate you that this evil, which I had foreseen and was powerless to prevent, may now be said to be substantially at an end, and that we shall not again during the war be exposed to seeing our strength diminished by this fruitful cause of disaster—short enlistments.

The people of the Confederate States, being principally engaged in agricultural pursuits, were unprovided at the commencement of hostilities with ships, shipyards, materials for shipbuilding, or skilled mechanics and seamen in sufficient numbers to make the prompt creation of a navy a practicable task even if the required appropriations had been made for the purpose. Notwithstanding our very limited resources, however, the report of the Secretary will exhibit to you a satisfactory progress in preparation, and a certainty of early completion of vessels of a number and class on which we may confidently rely for contesting the vaunted control of the enemy over our waters.

The financial system devised by the wisdom of your predecessors has proved adequate to supplying all the wants of the Government, notwithstanding the unexpected and very large increase of expenditures resulting from the great augmentation in the necessary means of defense. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury will exhibit the gratifying fact that we have no floating debt; that the credit of the Government is unimpaired, and that the total expenditure of the Government for the year has been in round numbers one hundred and seventy millions of dollars—less than one-third of the sum wasted by the enemy in his vain effort to conquer us; less than the value of a single article of export—the cotton crop of the year.

The report of the Postmaster-General will show the condition of that Department to be steadily improving—its revenues increasing and already affording the assurance that it will be self-sustaining at the date required by the Constitution, while affording ample mail facilities for the people.

In the Department of Justice, which includes the Patent Office and Public Printing, some legislative provisions will be required, which will be specifically stated in the report of the head of that Department. I invite the attention of Congress to the duty of organizing a supreme court of the Confederate States, in accordance with the mandate of the Constitution.

I refer you to my message communicated to the Provisional Congress in November last for such further information touching the condition of public affairs as it might be useful to lay before you, the short interval which has since elapsed not having produced any material changes in that condition other than those to which reference has already been made.

In conclusion, I cordially welcome Representatives who, recently chosen by the people, are fully imbued with their views and feelings, and can so ably advise me as to the needful provisions for the public service. I assure you of my hearty cooperation in all your efforts for the common welfare of the country.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Second. This House, with reverence and gratitude, recognizes the divine favor in the many victories which have crowned our arms; in the success of the Provisional Government during the appointed year of its existence, and in the establishment of our Permanent Government.

Third. This House regrets and will inquire into the causes and circumstances of our recent misfortunes; but without extenuating these misfortunes or disparaging the power of the enemy, the House retains a sincere and unshaken confidence in the ability of the Confederate States, by persevering efforts, to vindicate their independence and to expel and chastise the invader.

Fourth. This House will exert its powers with energy for the vigorous prosecution of the war, and the House confidently appeals to a loyal, brave, and free people to bear with fortitude those evils which partial successes may enable the enemy to inflict, and to sustain their Government and Army with united and zealous patriotism in repelling an invasion which is without parallel in the history of civilized nations for the wickedness of its motives and the barbarities that mark its progress.

Fifth. This House congratulates the country that the effect of recent misfortunes has been not to depress, but to arouse the spirit of the people and to increase the number of volunteers offering for the war.

ELEVENTH DAY—SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Ford.

The Chair laid before the House a communication from the President; which was read and laid upon the table, and is as follows, to wit:

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 19th instant asking for "the report of Maj. Gen. Thomas J. Jackson, respecting the recent operations of the division under his command in the Valley District of Virginia;" also "the report of Col. George W. Lay, inspector-general of the Department of Northern Virginia, as to the condition of the command in the Valley District," I have to state that upon examination of the files of the War Department it appears that no such report from Major-General Jackson as that called for has reached that Department, and that the report of Colonel Lay was made without actual inspection on his part of the Army at Romney, then under the immediate command of General Loring, and only gives, in relation to it, such information as he received from officers at Winchester.

The usual and generally necessary practice is to consider inspection reports as confidential. It would frequently happen that the publication of such reports would needlessly wound the feelings of officers and would promote discord and heart-burnings among the troops.

The present instance forms no exception to the general rule, and it is believed that the public interest would receive detriment from the communication of the report which is called for. Justice to the parties concerned would require that much more should be communicated than the report, if it were submitted.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The Chair also laid before the House a communication from the President; which was read and laid upon the table, and is as follows, to wit:

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives requesting the President to furnish the report of Col. Walter H. Jenifer of the battle of Leesburg, I have to state that a copy of General Evans' report of that battle, with all the accompanying papers, including the report of Col. Walter H. Jenifer, was sent with the report of the Secretary of War in December last to the Congress, and it is supposed that the notice of this fact will be accepted by you as a satisfactory compliance with the resolution above described.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The Speaker made a report from the Committee on Rules; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The report is as follows, viz:

Rules of the House of Representatives.

RULE I.

The Speaker shall take the chair every day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned on the preceding day; shall immediately call the House to order; and a quorum being present, shall cause the Journal of the preceding day to be read. RULE II.

He shall preserve order and decorum; may speak to points of order in preference to other members, rising from his seat for that purpose; and shall decide questions of order, subject to an appeal to the House. He shall rise to put a question, but may state it sitting.

RULE III.

Questions shall be distinctly put in the following form, viz: "As many as are of opinion that, etc. (as the question may be), say Aye," and after the affirmative vote is given, "As many as are of a contrary opinion say No." If the Speaker doubts, or a division is called for, the House shall divide; those in the affirmative of the question rising first from their seats, and afterwards those in the negative.

The Speaker shall have power to supervise and correct the Journal before it is read. He shall have a general direction of the Hall, with power, in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in such part thereof as may be appropriated to spectators, to have the same cleared. to keep the secrets of the House; and he shall be deemed to continue in office until his successor is appointed unless sooner dismissed therefrom. It shall be his duty to keep and preserve all records and other papers introduced and submitted to the consideration of the House, to furnish to the chairman of each committee a list of the members thereof, and from time to time such papers as may be referred to it, and a copy of all orders of instruction given by the House to such committee. And in all things he shall perform his duty as Clerk, under the direction of the Speaker.

RULE VII.

The Doorkeeper shall take the same oath with the Clerk, shall have the same tenure of office, and shall in like manner discharge the duties assigned him by the House, under the direction of the Speaker.

RULE VIII.

When a member rises to speak, he shall respectfully address, "Mr. Speaker," standing in his place; he shall confine himself strictly to the question before the House, and when he has finished he shall sit down.

RULE IX.

In any one debate on the same question, no member shall speak more than once, till all others have spoken, who desire to do so, nor more than twice without the consent of a majority of the members present.

RULE X.

When two or more members rise at the same time, the Speaker shall name the person to speak; but in all cases the member who shall first rise and address the Chair shall speak first.

RULE XI.

No member shall, in debate, use any language reflecting injuriously upon the character, motives, honor, or integrity of any other member.

RULE XII.

No member shall speak to another, or otherwise interrupt the business of the House, while the Journal or public papers are being read, or while any member is speaking in debate, or during the call of the roll.

RULE XIII.

If any member, in speaking, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call to order, in which case the member called to order shall immediately take his seat, unless permitted to explain, and the House, if appealed to, shall decide the case without debate. If there be no appeal, the decision of the Chair shall be submitted to. If the decision be in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed; if otherwise, he shall not proceed, except by leave of the House. For flagrant or repeated violations of order, especially if persisted in after the admonition of the Speaker, a member shall be liable to the censure of the House.

RULE XIV.

If any member be called to order by another member for words spoken, the words excepted to shall be immediately taken down in writing, in order that the Speaker and the House may be better able to judge the matter.

RULE XV.

Every member who shall be in the House when the question is put, shall give his vote, unless the House, for special reasons, shall excuse him. It shall not be in order to ask to be excused after the vote has commenced, nor upon motions to adjourn, to adjourn over, and the like. No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is particularly and immediately interested.

RULE XVI.

Any member shall have a right to vote at any time before the decision is pronounced by the Chair.

RULE XVII.

No member shall absent himself from the service of the House, unless he have leave, or be sick or unable to attend.

RULE XVIII.

Any ten members (including the Speaker, if there be one, and he be present) shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members.

RULE XIX.

Upon the call of the House, the names of the members shall be first called over by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; after which the names of the absentees shall again be called over; the doors shall then be shut, and those for whom no excuse, or insufficient excuses are made, may, by order of those present, if ten in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody, wherever to be found, by special messengers, to be appointed for that purpose.

RULE XX.

When a member shall be discharged from custody, and admitted to his seat, the House shall determine whether such discharge shall be with or without paying fees; and in like manner, whether a delinquent member, taken into custody by a special messenger, shall or shall not be liable to defray the expense of such special messenger.

RULE XXII.

Any motion or proposition may be withdrawn by the mover at any time, before a decision, amendment, or other action of the body upon it, except a motion to reconsider, which shall not be withdrawn without leave of the House.

RULE XXIII.

When a question is under debate, no motion (except as may be specifically provided for) shall be received but to adjourn; to lie on the table; to postpone indefinitely; to postpone to a day certain; to commit or amend; which several motions shall have precedence, in the order in which they stand arranged.

RULE XXIV.

If the question for decision contain several parts, any member may have the same divided; but, on a motion to strike out and insert, it shall not be in order to move for a division of the question; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert a different proposition, nor prevent a subsequent proposition simply to strike out; nor shall the rejection of a motion simply to strike out prevent a subsequent motion to strike out and insert.

RULE XXV.

Every joint resolution or bill requiring the signature of the President shall receive three readings in the House previous to its being passed, the Speaker giving notice at each reading whether it be the first, second, or third. The first reading of a bill or joint resolution shall be for information, and if opposition be made to it, the question shall be propounded "Shall the bill or resolution be rejected?" If no objection be made, or if the question on rejection be decided in the negative, the bill or resolution shall go to a second reading without a question.

After second reading, all such matters, unless the previous question be ordered, shall be open to amendment in the House, but it shall be in order in that stage of proceedings for any member to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering it.

If the motion to go into Committee of the Whole shall prevail, the measure shall be taken up for immediate consideration, and nothing else shall be in order in said committee. If the committee rise before the consideration of the measure shall be concluded, the same shall be reported back and have place as unfinished business in the House, but as soon as it shall be again reached in order, unless it be otherwise disposed of, the House shall stand again resolved into Committee of the Whole, and so on, till the consideration of the measure therein be fully concluded.

Whereupon the committee shall be considered as dissolved, and the chairman shall report the measure back to the House, with the recommendation of the committee. The final question on any matter which shall have been considered in Committee of the Whole or by the House after second reading, shall be, "Whether it shall be engrossed and read a third time?"

And no amendment shall be received after the engrossment for a third reading has been ordered. But it shall at all times be in order before the final action on any matter to move its commitment, and should such commitment take place, and any amendment be reported by the committee, the whole shall be again read a second time and considered in like manner as if it had not before been engrossed.

RULE XXVI.

All appropriation bills and bills laying a tax upon the people shall be considered and matured in Committee of the Whole. The mode of proceeding in Committee of the Whole shall be to read over the bill or other matter at length for information, if desired by any member, and then to read it again by sections or clauses for amendment. The rules of the House shall be enforced in Committee of the Whole so far as applicable. The question may be called on the pending proposition, but the previous question shall not be ordered in Committee of the Whole.

RULE XXVII.

A motion to lay any amendment on the table prevailing, shall carry with it only the amendment and not the original proposition or matter. And no motion or proposition different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

RULE XXVIII.

After a bill (or other matter) has been ordered to be engrossed, and it has been read a third time, the question shall be, "Shall the bill (or other matter, whatever it may be) now pass?"

RULE XXIX.

The title of bills and joint resolutions submitted to the House, and such parts thereof only as may be affected by proposed amendments, shall be inserted on the Journal.

RULE XXX.

When the previous question is called, the main question shall not be put, unless ordered by two-thirds of the members present; but upon the call for the question, made by any member, if the same be seconded by a majority of those present, the vote shall be immediately taken on the pending question, whatever it may be, without further debate.

RULE XXXI.

The form of the previous question shall be, "Shall the main question be now put?" and if ordered, its effect shall be to put an end to all debate and bring the House to a direct vote, first, on the motion to commit, if pending, then on pending amendments, and then upon the main question. If upon the call for the previous question the main question be not ordered, debate shall continue as if the demand had not been made.

RULE XXXII.

The motion to adjourn, and to fix the time to which the House shall adjourn, shall always be in order. These motions and the motion to lie on the table, and the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, and for the previous question, shall be decided without debate.

RULE XXXIII.

RULE XXXIV.

The yeas and nays on any question in Committee of the Whole and in the House may be called for at any time before proceeding to another question or proposition, but being once refused, they shall not be again demanded on the same question. In taking the yeas and nays the list of members shall be called alphabetically, except that the Speaker shall be called last.

RULE XXXV.

All committees shall be appointed by the Speaker, unless otherwise specially directed by the House, in which case they shall be appointed by ballot, and a plurality of votes shall prevail.

2. The call of committees for reports, in the order in which said committees shall be named in the rules. When a committee shall report a bill, resolution, or other matter for the consideration of the House, the question first propounded by the Chair shall be: "Shall this bill (or other matter, as the case may be) be placed on the Calendar?" But pending this question the motion to adjourn, to lie on the table, to postpone indefinitely, to postpone to a day certain, and to commit, shall have precedence in the order in which they stand arranged.

3. The Calendar or regular orders of the day shall then be taken up, and every bill, resolution, or other measure shall be disposed of in the order in which it there stands. In calling the States and committees, and in considering the regular order of business each day, the unfinished business in each class shall first be considered in that particular class.

RULE XL.

At least one hour each day shall be set apart for the call of the States and committees, and the regular order shall in no event interfere therewith; and special orders shall not do so unless the intention of the House in that respect be clearly expressed.

RULE XLI.

The rules shall not be suspended, nor any special order made, nor the regular order of business changed, except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, but a majority shall have power, at any time, to postpone the particular matter under consideration with a view to take up some other measure.

RULE XLII.

When a question has once been made and carried in the affirmative or negative, a motion to reconsider shall be entertained on motion of any member who voted with the prevailing side, provided it be made on the same day on which the vote was taken, or within the next two days of actual session. The motion to reconsider may be entered as a matter of privilege, and its consideration shall take precedence of everything except special orders and other questions of privilege.

RULE XLIII.

All questions of order shall be decided by the Speaker without debate, subject to an appeal to the House. If the decision relate to a question of decorum, or propriety of conduct, it shall not be debatable. If it relate to the priority of business, or the relevancy or applicability of propositions, the appeal may be debated, but no member shall speak on it more than once, except by leave of the House.

RULE XLIV.

Whenever any matter is under consideration, a motion to print shall always be in order, unless cut off by a call for the question or the previous question, but all motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, message, or other documents shall be referred to the Committee on Printing.

RULE XLV.

Stenographers and reporters for the press wishing to take down the proceedings of the House may be admitted by the Speaker, who shall assign to them such places on the floor as shall not interfere with the convenience of the members when in open session.

RULE XLVI.

On motion made and seconded to go into secret session, the Speaker shall forthwith order the Hall to be cleared and the doors to be closed, but as soon as the business for consideration in secret session is disclosed, the question shall be propounded to the House, if demanded by any member, "Shall this matter be considered in secret session?" If a majority shall vote in the negative, the House shall immediately resume open session, and business shall proceed in order.

RULE XLVII.

The House being in secret session, the same order of business shall prevail which is prescribed for the House in open session, except that a majority in secret session shall have power to change such order and determine what shall first be taken up.

RULE XLVIII.

The motion prevailed.

The Chair also laid before the House the following communication from the President, viz:

RICHMOND, March 4, 1862.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

SIR: In response to the resolution of the House of yesterday, calling on the President to communicate "what additional means, in money, men, arms, and munitions of war, are, in his judgment, necessary, or may be within the present year, for the public service, including operations on land and water," I have to reply that the military forces, whether land or naval, which will be required must depend upon the operations of the enemy and upon contingencies which can not be foreseen. Taking our present condition as the basis of the calculation, it may be stated in general terms that our land forces should be increased by the addition of, say, 300,000 men in the field and those for whom call has already been made. That the Navy should be increased by a number of vessels suited to river and harbor defense, say, 50 iron-clad propellers and a fleet of, say, 10 of the most formidable war vessels, to protect our commerce upon the high seas, with the requisite armaments and crews.

For this additional force, land and naval, there would be required, say, 750,000 small arms of all kinds, and of siege and field and seacoast artillery, say, 5,000 guns; of powder, say, 5,000 tons, in addition to that which can be made within the limits of the Confederacy. The manufacture of projectiles could, it is believed, be carried to the requisite extent in our own foundries, at a cost which must be measured by the number of guns actively employed.

For further details I refer to the accompanying reports of the Secretaries of War and Navy.

The amount of money which will be required will depend upon the extent to which the articles needed may be obtained; and as I can not hope to get more than a small part of that which a reply to the resolution required me to enumerate, I have not attempted to convert the articles into their probable money value.

Estimates have been prepared and will be laid before the Congress, showing the appropriations which it is deemed proper to ask in view of the public wants and the possibility to supply them, as well as of the condition of the finances of the Confederate States.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion of Mr. Perkins,

The message was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; and

The communication from the Secretary of War was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; and Benjamin, as Secretary of War, has not the confidence of the people of the Confederate States, nor of the Army, to such an extent as to meet the exigencies of the present crisis, and that we most respectfully suggest that his retirement from said office, and the filling of the same with an incumbent in whom the country and Army have full confidence, is a high military necessity.

At what period was it that the Confederate forces under General Johnston first established themselves in the city of Bowling Green; and what was our force at that time and within the period of a week?

What was the force of the enemy at that time, between Bowling Green and the Ohio River, and where located?

What prevented General Johnston, at that time, from making a forward movement toward the Ohio? Was he restrained by instructions from the War Department, or was he left to his own discretion in the matter?

What forces, if any, were sent from Bowling Green to Fort Donelson previously to the first battle at that place, and under whose command?

What number of forces did General Johnston retain at Bowling Green up to the time of its evacuation?

Did General Johnston reenforce, or attempt to reenforce, the Confederate Army at Fort Donelson during the progress of the conflict at that place?

Is it within the knowledge of the War Department that any applications were made by the commander of our forces at Fort Donelson for reinforcements previous to or during the conflict at that place?

Was General Johnston restrained, by orders from the War Department, from sending reinforcements, or was he left to his own discretion in that regard?

What means of transportation had General Johnston at Bowling Green to enable him to reinforce Fort Donelson during the contest had he been disposed to do so?

When were the fortifications at Fort Donelson and Fort Henry constructed, and in what mode?

Was there any military reconnoitering done along the banks of the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers, with the view to judicious selections of places for fortifications, before the sites for Forts Henry and Donelson were selected?

Did General Johnston fall back from Bowling Green in accordance with instructions from the War Department, or was he left to his own discretion in the matter?

Why was Nashville surrendered to the enemy? Did General Johnston proceed upon his own discretion or under instructions from the War Department in regard to the act of surrendering that city into the hands of the enemy?

When General Johnston, about the first of October last, made a call upon several of the States of the Southwest, including the State of Tennessee, for large numbers of troops, why was that call revoked? Was the act of revocation in pursuance of an order from the War Department, or upon his own judgment merely?

Has the War Department received any official reports of the affair at Fort Henry or Fort Donelson, or touching the surrender of Nashville? If so, communicate the same.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report what legislation is necessary to enable officers in the Army of the Confederate States to hold their seats in the Congress of the Confederate States, or whether they are entitled to do so under the Constitution without any legislation,

Made the following report, viz:

The Committee on the Judiciary have considered the resolution instructing them "to inquire and report what legislation is necessary to enable officers in the Army of the Confederate States to hold their seats in the Congress of the Confederate States, or whether they are entitled to do so under the Constitution without any legislation," and a majority report: That the terms of the resolution seem to be answered by the recital of a part of the second paragraph of the sixth section of the first article of the Constitution. It contains these words, to wit: "And no person holding any office under the Confederate States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office." The Army of the Confederate States is an establishment created by and organized under authority of the Confederate Congress, according to its power "to raise and support armies;" and its officers are commissioned by and subject to the direction and control of the President of the Confederate States as its Commander in Chief. That such officers are "persons holding office under the Confederate States" appears to be a simple matter of fact under the laws, and it necessarily follows that they can not hold seats as members of either House of Congress. No legislation can entitle them to do so, for it would be manifestly in violation of the prohibition recited.

The purpose of that prohibition seems obvious; and when taken in connection with the preceding clause of the same paragraph, which prohibits the appointment of any member of Congress to any civil office, which shall have been created, or the emolument whereof shall have been increased during the time for which he was elected, that purpose is fully manifested. It was to preserve the independence of the legislature as a coordinate branch of the Government—to prevent the exercise by the same persons of functions appertaining to distinct departments—to render the legislature free from executive influence, and to remove from its members the temptations which might arise from hope of executive favor or patronage. It requires no extensive knowledge of the history of governments, and of the undue influence of executive power over legislative bodies, to perceive the wisdom of this purpose. To no class of officers does it apply with greater force than to those of the Army; for none others are more directly under executive control. Moreover, there appears to be an incompatibility in the exercise of the functions of a member of Congress and an officer of the Army. It is not practicable to discharge legislative duties in Congress and military duties in the field, or bureaus, at the same time. If, then, the power existed so to legislate as to entitle officers of the Army also to hold seats as members of Congress, it would, in the opinion of the committee, be an unwise exercise of such power.

Having thus answered the exact terms of the resolution, it may be that the committee has discharged its duty. But they are informed that it was the intention of the resolution to inquire whether there is any, and what difference there may be, between the case of officers of the Provisional Army and that of those in the regular service, and therefore have also considered that point.

The Regular Army is composed of officers holding their appointments directly from the President, and of soldiers enlisted for a definite period, and is an establishment created by the Confederate States of a permanent character. The Provisional Army is composed of volunteer soldiers for short terms, or for the war, unless sooner discharged, and of volunteer officers who also hold their appointments, either directly or indirectly, under the authority of the laws of the Confederate States. It is an establishment of a temporary character, but created under the same power to raise armies, as is the Regular Army. Their organization, pay, and government is the same. It is true that a part of the Provisional Army is composed of volunteer soldiers who were at first in the service of their respective States, and whose officers were appointed by their respective States. But they became a part of the Provisional Army of the Confederacy under the law authorizing the President "to receive into the service of this Government such forces now in the service of said States, as may be tendered," etc.; and by the same law it was declared that "such forces may be received, with their officers, * * * and when so received shall form a part of the Provisional Army of the Confederate States," and also that they should have the same pay and allowances, and be subject to the same rules and government as the Army. It is likewise true that in another act providing for the public defense, the President was authorized to ask for and accept volunteers, and it was declared that the volunteers might be accepted "in companies, battalions, and regiments whose officers shall be appointed in the manner prescribed by law in the several States to which they shall respectively belong." But by the same act it was declared that "when inspected, mustered, and received into the service of the Confederate States, said troops shall be regarded in all respects as a part of the Army of said Confederate States." Now, though the officers of these volunteer troops may have originally received their appointment from their respective States, yet the troops being raised by virtue of Confederate laws, and the appointments made by virtue of the same laws when received into the service of the Confederate States under these laws, they, to all intents and purposes, became officers in the Army of those States, and held their offices under them. From the time of their entering the service they, "in all respects," became a part of the Army of the Confederacy, subject to the same control, entitled to the same rules of promotion and removal, and liable to the same disabilities during the time of their service, as officers of the Regular Army. They are not, therefore, entitled to hold seats as members of Congress, but are subject to the constitutional prohibition in letter and spirit, and no further legislation can entitle them to do so.

P. W. GRAY.
A. H. GARLAND.
J. W. MOORE.
THOS. S. ASHE.
J. B. HEISKELL.
E. S. DARGAN.

The undersigned members of the committee assent to the conclusions of the above report, so far as relates to officers of the Regular and Provisional Armies commissioned by the President; but the undersigned think that officers of volunteers or militia holding commissions from governors of States only are eligible to seats in this House.

LUCIUS J. GARTRELL.
CHARLES W. RUSSELL.

The report was, on motion of Mr. Gray, laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

A resolution inquiring as to whether the law now in force for the issue of Treasury notes was or not in conflict with the Constitution, etc.,

The Judiciary Committee, to whom was referred the resolution instructing them "to inquire whether the law now in force to provide for the issue of Treasury notes, and laying a war tax for their redemption, approved August 19, 1861, is not in conflict with the Permanent Constitution of the Confederate States, and if so, what legislation is necessary to render its provisions conformable thereto," have considered the subject, and report that they are of the opinion that the act referred to in the resolution is not in conflict with the provisions of the Permanent Constitution, and that no legislation on the subject is now necessary.

A bill to repeal an act for the sequestration of the estates, property, and effects of alien enemies, and for the indemnity of citizens of the Confederate States and persons aiding the same in the existing war with the United States,

Upon motion of Mr. Foote, the House then resolved itself into secret session; and having spent some time therein, again resolved itself into open session;

When,

The Chair presented a message from the President; which was read, and is as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

I herewith transmit a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, of this date, covering the official report of the naval engagement between the James River squadron and the enemy's fleet in Hampton Roads, on the 8th instant.

The officers and men of our Navy engaged in this brilliant affair deserve well of their country, and are commended to the consideration of the Congress.

The disparity of the forces engaged did not justify the anticipation of so great a victory, and it is doubly gratifying that it has been won upon an element where we were supposed to be least able to compete with our enemy.

Special attention is called to the perfidious conduct of the enemy in hoisting, on the frigate Congress, a white flag, and renewing fire from that vessel under the impunity thus obtained.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, March 11, 1862.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith copies of such official reports as have been received at the War Department of the defense and fall of Fort Donelson. They will be found incomplete and unsatisfactory. Instructions have been given to furnish further information upon the several points not made intelligible by the reports. It is not stated that reinforcements were at any time asked for; nor is it demonstrated to have been impossible to have saved the army by evacuating the position; nor is it known by what means it was found practicable to withdraw a part of the garrison, leaving the remainder to surrender; nor upon what authority or principle of action the senior generals abandoned responsibility by transferring the command to a junior officer.

In a former communication to Congress I presented the propriety of a suspension of judgment in relation to the disaster at Fort Donelson until official reports could be received. I regret the information now furnished is so defective. In the meantime, hopeful that satisfactory explanation may be made, I have directed, upon the exhibition of the case as presented by the two senior generals, that they should be relieved from command to await further orders whenever a reliable judgment can be rendered on the merits of the case.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Heiskell moved that, in addition to the usual number, 1,000 copies of the reports of Generals Floyd and Pillow be printed.

A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. Nash, their Secretary; which is as follows, to wit:

The Chair presented a message from the President; which was read as follows, to wit:

RICHMOND, March 13, 1862.

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the 26th ultimo, calling for a statement as to the establishments under contract for the supply of small arms and of powder, and what means are employed in furnishing percussion caps, and whether the various manufacturing establishments now employed by the Government will be able to furnish an ample supply of arms, powder, and percussion caps for the use of our Army, I herewith transmit a report of the Secretary of War, which gives such information in relation to the ability of the establishments employed as it is hoped will be satisfactory to the Congress.

The Government has secured a supply of sulphur sufficient for any proximate want; proper charcoal can be obtained in any requisite quantity, and it only requires an adequate supply of saltpeter to secure the manufacture of more powder than can be profitably used. In addition to the mills now in active operation, a very extensive one has been constructed in Georgia, which we have not started because the supply of saltpeter did not justify it. Establishments for the manufacture of small arms are being constructed and developed, but, as was to have been anticipated, the progress has been slow, and the want of mechanics does not permit us to hope for such extensive results as would satisfy existing necessities.

The attention of Congress is called to the remarks of the Secretary on the subject of iron and a method of increasing its production.

For further information reference is made to the tabular statement of the Chief of Ordnance, which is annexed to the letter of the Secretary of War.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, March 14, 1862.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Not being able to approve, I return, with my objections, in accordance with the duty imposed by the Constitution, an act entitled "An act to create the office of commanding general of the armies of the Confederate States."

The act creates an office which is to continue during the pleasure of the President, but the tenure of office of the general to be appointed is without any other limitation than that of the office itself. The purpose of the act, so far as it creates a military bureau, the head of which, at the seat of government, under direction of the President, shall be charged with the movement of troops, the supply and discipline of the Army, I fully approve. But by what I can not regard otherwise than as an inadvertence on the part of Congress, the officer so appointed is authorized to take the field at his own discretion and command any army or armies he may choose, not only without the direction, but even against the will of the President, who could not, consistently with this act, prevent such conduct of the general otherwise than by abolishing his office.

To show that this act would be highly detrimental to the Army, it might be enough to say that no general would be content to prepare troops for battle, conduct their movements, and share their privations during a whole campaign, if he expected to find himself superseded at the very moment of action.

But there is another ground, which to my mind is conclusive. The Constitution vests in the Executive the command in chief of the armies of the Confederacy.

That command is totally inconsistent with the existence of an officer authorized, at his own discretion, to take command of armies assigned by the President to other generals. The Executive could in no just sense be said to be commander in chief, if without the power to control the discretion of the general created by this act.

As it can not have been the intention of Congress to create the office of a general not bound to obey the orders of the Chief Magistrate, and as this seems to be the effect of the act, I can but anticipate the concurrence of the Congress in my opinion that it should not become a law.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Johnson, claiming that he has been duly elected a member of the House from the Third Congressional district of the State of Arkansas, and denying the right of the Hon. A. H. Garland to his seat, and other papers relating thereto, have had the same under consideration and ask leave to report:

In examining the papers referred to your committee, they are of opinion that it will conduce to a proper understanding of the merits of the controversy, and a just and fair decision, to allow the parties to present their respective claims with greater precision, and to take other proofs in relation to the issues which may be thus presented.

The contestant asks to be allowed to take evidence in reference to the vote of Arkansas County, and in assenting thereto, the committee have thought it just to accord like privileges to both parties.

Premitting the expression of any opinion upon the case as it now stands, for obvious reasons, the committee report the matter to the House, and recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolutions.

W. N. H. SMITH, Chairman.

The accompanying resolutions are as follows, to wit:

Resolved, First. That thirty days be allowed the contestant to amend his notice, if he so desire.

Second. That the sitting member be allowed thirty days after such amendment is made, and notice thereof, or after notice of contestant's declining to amend, in which to make and serve his answer thereto on contestant, setting out in said answer the grounds on which he rests the validity of his own, and denies the election of contestant.

Third. That after service of the answer or expiration of the time limited therefor, sixty days be allowed the parties to take evidence, which shall be confined to the allegations and denials contained in the answer and notice, and that the same be taken and transmitted to the House under the rules prescribed by the act of Congress of the United States, approved February nineteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections."

Mr. Staples, by the consent of the House, submitted the views of the minority of the committee; which are as follows, viz:

The undersigned two of the Committee on Elections, to whom was referred the petition of the Hon. J. P. Johnson of Arkansas, "claiming the seat in this House as the Representative from the Third district in the State of Arkansas, and asking that he be permitted to contest the seat of the sitting member, the Hon. A. H. Garland," differing in their convictions from the majority of the committee, beg leave to present this minority report:

In pursuance to law, an election for Congressman was held in the Third Congressional district in the State of Arkansas, on the 6th of November, 1861, at which the contestant and the sitting member, together with others, were candidates, and as such voted for.

The district is composed of thirteen counties, the county of Arkansas being one. In the State of Arkansas the voting is by ballot, and it is made the duty of the judges of the several precincts to make out duplicate lists or poll books of the ballots or votes cast, one of which they are required to retain and the other to return, under cover of seal, to the clerk of the county court within three days after the election; but if, from any cause, the poll books should not be returned within three days, from any one of the precincts, it is made the duty of the clerk, on the next day (that is, the fourth day after the election) to dispatch a messenger for the same.

The law further provides that if the poll books are all returned within the three days, it shall be the duty of the clerk, on the fifth day after the election, to call to his assistance two justices of the peace, if to be had conveniently; if not, two householders, who, being first sworn, shall proceed to open the poll books and cast up the votes for each of the candidates and make out an abstract of the vote as they may find it to be from the poll books. In the event the poll books are not received within the three days, and a messenger is dispatched as contemplated by the statute, then the abstract is to be made out on the seventh day after the election.

The abstract thus made out is to be certified, and it is made the duty of the clerk immediately to mail it, in the nearest post-office, addressed to the secretary of state, at the capitol, or seat of government, whose duty it shall be to file the same away in his office, under seal.

It is made the duty of the governor and secretary of state, within thirty days, or sooner if the returns are all in, to open the abstracts or certificates and count up the vote, and the governor shall then immediately issue a certificate of election to the person having the highest number of votes, and also his proclamation announcing his election. (See Gould Digest, Statutes of Arkansas, under head of "Election.")

In this case, on the 13th November, seven days after the election, the deputy clerk, a justice of the peace, and a householder opened the poll books of Arkansas County and cast up the vote, and thereupon forwarded the abstract to the secretary of state.

This abstract shows that the sitting member received 175 votes and the contestant 73 votes.

When this abstract reached the office of the secretary of state does not appear, but it was on or prior to the 10th day of December, 1861; for on that day, acting upon this certificate, or abstract, the governor issued the certificate of election to Mr. Garland, and also issued his proclamation announcing the vote, which agrees with this first certificate.

On the 10th day of December, 1861, the clerk of the county court and the same justice and householder, by some means learning a mistake had been made in counting the vote on the 7th of November preceding, took the poll books and recounted the votes, and upon such recounting discovered that the contestant had in fact received 133 votes and the Hon. A. H. Garland 195.

Assuming this last abstract to be the correct one, by adding the vote received by each in Arkansas County to the aggregate vote of each in the other counties, there is a clear plurality in favor of contestant of 8 votes.

This last abstract reached the secretary's office on the 11th of December, one day after the governor issued his certificate to Mr. Garland, and was received and filed in the secretary's office. Accompanying the last abstract is the statement of the clerk, that on the day the polls were first compared and the abstract was made out, he was engaged waiting upon the circuit court, then in session, and the polls were then compared by his deputy, the justice, and the householder; and the clerk, justice, and householder all unite in praying the governor to suffer them to withdraw the first and incorrect return and substitute the last or true one.

The true, or, as it is called by the contestant, the corrected, return was on file within the thirty days allowed the governor to grant the certificate and issue his proclamation, computing the time to commence running from the comparison of the polls, which, we think, is the obvious meaning of the statute of Arkansas.

It is proper to state in this connection that in the first abstract the aggregate vote of the county only is given, whereas the last, or corrected, return gives the vote by precincts.

Upon this statement of facts the contestant, on the 14th day of December, gave the sitting member notice that he would contest his right to the seat, which notice Mr. Garland admits he received between the 21st and 23d of the same month. To this notice Mr. Garland did not respond within the time prescribed by the act of Congress passed in 1851, now in force in the Confederate States of America.

In his argument before the committee he excepted to it on the ground of indefiniteness and want of particularity.

We do not propose to discuss the proposition in this report.

We think the notice sufficiently acquaints the party with the ground relied on by the contestant to establish his right to the seat, and in this opinion a majority of the committee concurred.

As before stated, Mr. Garland failed to answer the notice within the time prescribed by law, and in his response to the petition of the contestant he fails to controvert the fact charged, that the corrected list of the vote of Arkansas County gives the contestant a majority of 8 votes.

What consequences, if any, flow from this failure?

We think it operates as a confession of the facts alleged, and, taken in connection with the testimony adduced before the committee, establishes Mr. Johnson's right to the seat in controversy.

Mr. Garland objected to the introduction of the last, or corrected, return as evidence upon the ground that it was not made within the time prescribed by the law of Arkansas, and upon the further ground that the officers comparing the polls became immediately after making out and certifying the first abstract functi officio, and had no right, at a subsequent period, to examine the poll books and make out a new and corrected abstract.

The statutes of Arkansas marked by him are merely directory, and a noncompliance with their requirements on the part of State officials, either by a failure to make any return whatever within the time required or by a false and mistaken return of the vote cast, can not, we think, affect the right of the parties or restrain this body from a full investigation and a deliberate judgment of the results of a popular election.

This House, under the Constitution, is the sole judge of the election and return of its own members. This power is requisite to preserve a pure and genuine representation, and to the prevention of frauds, and the correction of mistakes and blunders on the part of mere ministerial agents in ascertaining and certifying the results of a popular canvass.

Nobody can be so watchful as this in guarding its own rights and privileges from infringement, in purifying and vindicating its own character, and in preserving and sustaining the free choice of its constituents.

Guided, as we have been, we trust, by a sincere desire to do exact justice to the parties, and having in view the public interest, in seeing that each district is represented in this House by the members really and duly elected, we have arrived at the conclusion that the sitting member, the Hon. A. H. Garland, is not duly elected from the said Congressional district of the State of Arkansas as a Representative to the First Congress of the Confederate States; but that said contestant, the Hon. Jilson P. Johnson, was and is duly elected from said district, and is entitled to a seat as a Representative from the same.

We therefore beg, respectfully, to express our decided dissent from the recommendation contained in the report of the majority of the committee. The adoption of that report would, in our judgment, be productive of a long, tedious, and expensive continuance of an investigation, not merely into the correctness of the returns from each county, but of the fairness and legality of every vote cast in the district. According to our understanding, the only question at issue between Mr. Johnson and Mr. Garland before the committee related to the vote of Arkansas County. There was no paper, no document, before the committee; not a scintilla of proof tending to show the existence of any mistake, fraud, or mismanagement of the vote or in the returns from any other county. And while we are of opinion that the poll books of the county of Arkansas, or testimony tending to elucidate the true vote of that county, might with propriety be brought before the committee for the satisfaction of those who entertained doubts of the result there, we are satisfied that to throw open the door, at this stage of the proceedings, to an inquiry into the vote of the entire district would result in establishing an unwise precedent, in raising new questions and presenting other issues than those contemplated by the parties in the proofs and pleadings exhibited and evolved before the committee.

WALLER R. STAPLES.

JNO. W. CROCKETT.

We do, therefore, offer the following resolution for the adoption of this House, viz:
Resolved, That the Hon. J. P. Johnson is duly elected Representative from the Third Congressional district of the State of Arkansas, and as such is entitled to the seat in this House as the Representative from said Third district.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Herewith I submit a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, with an estimate for an appropriation to enable him to purchase or construct ironclad vessels.

Though it is certainly doubtful whether a change in the present condition of affairs in Europe will occur, which would render it practicable to effect the object in the manner proposed, it may be proper to put the Department in a position which will enable it to take advantage of any opportunity which may be presented for the rapid increase of that class of vessels which are believed to be the best suited to coast and harbor defense.

I recommend, therefore, that the appropriation asked for be granted.

SECRET SESSION.

The House being in secret session,

RICHMOND, VA., March 20, 1862.

To the House of Representatives, Confederate States of America:

In reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 24th ultimo, requesting the President to furnish certain information in reference to the James River defenses and the defenses of the city of Richmond, with his own opinion thereon, and to cause a survey to be made of the Chickahominy and its branches, with reference to its being occupied as a defensive line, I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting a report of Capt. Alfred L. Rives, in charge of the Engineer Bureau, on the subjects referred to, so far as the information obtained will admit.

The report of Captain Rives states the facts in regard to the state of the defenses of the James River and the city of Richmond; and in the views presented by him I generally concur. It may be proper, however, to add something in explanation of the facts presented, and my own impressions derived from various sources from time to time.

The work at Day's Point possesses but little value for the defense proper of the James River. It was located with regard to the protection of Burwell's Bay and the country above from foraging excursions of the enemy by water, and as a protection to our own boats in the river. A site somewhat lower down would have been preferable, according to information obtained since the location of the work, but it has thus far fulfilled its object; and as it has been well constructed, with much labor and expense, it is probably best not to disturb it, except by the addition of a small outwork to command the approaches in its rear, which I am told is being done.

The next position above, defended by the works at Hardy's Bluff and Mulberry Island, possesses great importance from being the right flank of General Magruder's chosen defensive line on the peninsula, and the lowest point which gives the hope of a successful protection of the river against the wooden fleets of the enemy. Ironclad vessels, of which we have not had sufficient experience to form a correct judgment, can pass these works, as the channel is too wide and deep for obstructions, unless wrought-iron bolts, now being prepared for trial against the Ericsson battery (Monitor) and others of the same class, prove more effective than can be reasonably hoped for; but still the transports necessary for a formidable expedition ought to be kept back by the batteries so long as they are held; and it is thought that they should not be silenced by a few ironclad vessels operating with a small number of guns at long range, especially as the battery at Hardy's Bluff has considerable elevation. Both works are strong against a land attack. The guns at Jamestown Island will probably be removed to the position just referred to so soon as it is fully prepared for them.

The position at Drewry's Bluff, 7 or 8 miles below Richmond, which has intimate relations with the defenses proper of this city, was chosen to obstruct the river against such vessels as the Monitor. The work is being rapidly completed.

Either Fort Powhatan or Kennon's Marshes, if found to be the proper positions, will be fortified and obstructed as at Drewry's Bluff to prevent the ascent of the river by ironclad vessels. Blocking the channel, where sufficiently narrow, by strong lines of obstructions, filling it with submarine batteries, and flanking the obstructions by well-protected batteries of the heaviest guns, seem to offer the best and speediest chances of protection, with the means at our disposal, against ironclad floating batteries.

The field works for the defense of Richmond, which are arranged upon the plan of the detached system, conceded by most military men to be the best, are completed, with the exception of two on the side of the city and one main and two accessory works on the Manchester side.

The unfinished works will be completed as soon as more important ones farther from the city are in a more efficient condition. The line occupied by these works was chosen to make it as short as possible, partly from the difficulty of defending a longer line, and partly from the time, labor, and expense necessary to construct such a one. It is rather nearer the city than desirable, but the enemy must remain out of reach of our guns, at least as heavy as his, until the line is carried, and then the city must fall, whether the line be near or removed within the limits of a few miles.

I see no advantage in constructing a new line more removed from the city, unless the Chickahominy be found suited to the system of dams and overflow which, I think, from the information in my possession, is problematical. Should the enemy get near enough to lay siege to this city, additional works can be thrown up, as he develops his plans and means; and these, with those already constructed, can be armed with the guns which would necessarily be brought back with the troops to defend them. The want of heavy guns and the requisite carriages has prevented the fortifications here from being armed with them to any extent, and I do not think it wise to take them for this purpose from other points where, in my opinion, they are more needed.

Any system of fortification which could be constructed during war for the defense of this city would only serve to gain time. An army which allows itself to be shut up in a fortified city must finally yield to an enemy superior in numbers and munitions of war.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were laid on the table.

The House then took up a Senate bill to regulate the mode of paying the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the disbursement of the contingent fund; which was read first and second times and referred to the Committee on Pay and Mileage.

Also, a bill to provide for the payment of musicians in the Army not regularly enlisted; which was read first and second times and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill relative to the estimates of the several heads of Departments; which was read first and second times and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill relative to the prepayment of postage; which was read first and second times and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Also, a bill to encourage enlistments in the Corps of Marines; which was read first and second times and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The House then proceeded to consider a Senate bill to provide a staff and clerical force for any general who may be assigned by the President to duty at the seat of government; which was read first and second times, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Conrad offered the following resolution; which was read and agreed to, to wit:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform this House whether any preparations have been or are being made to protect, by way of submarine batteries or by sinking obstructions in the channel where they are practicable, for the protection of our principal cities from an attack by iron-plated vessels, and whether any additional appropriations for these objects, or either of them, are necessary.

Mr. Dupré moved that the House do now resolve itself into open session.

The motion did not prevail.

And on motion of Mr. Kenner, the House went into the Committee of the Whole on

A bill making appropriations for the support of the Government from 1st of April to 30th of November, 1862, and for objects hereinafter expressed;

Mr. Chilton being in the chair, and having spent some time therein, the committee rose and, through their Chairman, reported that they had not finished the consideration of the bill, and asked leave to sit again; which was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Heiskell,

The House then resolved itself into open session.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY—SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Doggett.

Mr. Smith of North Carolina, from the Committee on Elections, reported and recommended the passage of the following resolutions; which were read, made the special order for Wednesday next, and ordered to be printed, to wit:

The Committee on Elections, to whom was referred the petition of J. P. Johnson, praying to be allowed to contest the seat of A. H. Garland, and claiming the right thereto, as Representative from the Third Congressional district of Arkansas, with the other papers pertaining to the case, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to make a report.

The report heretofore made, presented to the House the question of a further extension of time to enable the parties to come to distinct and specific issues, and to collect the evidence either might deem material thereto.

The refusal of the House to proceed and the recommitment of the whole matter, if not to be taken as instructions, are, nevertheless, deemed clear indications of an intention that your committee report the facts of the case and the points and merits of the controversy arising upon them in its present aspects; the duty thus imposed they now undertake to discharge.

Your committee find that according to the returns from the several counties of the Third Congressional district of Arkansas sent to the office of secretary of state as required by law, and published in the proclamation of the governor on the 10th day of December, 1861, the sitting member, A. H. Garland, received 2,157 votes, and the contestant, J. P. Johnson, received 2,125 votes, while four other candidates received a less number each. Upon this declared statement of the vote, the sitting member has a plurality of 32 votes over contestant, and was awarded the certificate of election. In arriving at these aggregates, the vote cast in Arkansas County, which alone is drawn in question before the committee, is reported from that county by the returning officers in the following words:

"A. H. Garland received one hundred seventy-five votes."

"J. P. Johnson received seventy-three votes."

And there are other votes reported for other candidates, which it is not necessary for a proper understanding of the case, to set out.

The vote of the county is evidenced by what purports to be .

"An abstract of the returns of the election held in Arkansas County, State of Arkansas, on Wednesday, the 6th day of November, 1861, for a Representative to the Congress of the Confederate States of America for the Third Congressional district as appears from returns made to this" (the county court clerk's) "office," and the "abstract" is certified by a deputy county court clerk, in the name and on behalf of his principal, Joseph H. Maxwell, in an official attestation and by two other persons, Lewis Thompson, a justice of the peace, and A. H. McDonald, a householder, to be a true statement of the "polls of the election held in said county on the 6th day of November, 1861," "according to the poll books returned and filed" in his office. The certificate bears date, the 13th day of November, the seventh day after the election.

A second return dated December 7, and bearing the official attestation of the clerk alone, was prepared by him and deposited with the secretary of state, which upon its face also purports to be "A list of votes given on the 6th day of November, 1861, in Arkansas County, Ark., for Congress," and gives in detail the separate vote at the election precincts of the county. This return is declared to have been made after examination of the poll books and to be "A full and correct list" of the votes, and gives the sitting member 186 votes, and the contestant 98 votes. A certified copy of this return from the office of the secretary of state was placed in the hands of the committee by the sitting member.

A third return, unexceptionable in form, certified officially by the clerk and the same persons who certify the first, was prepared on the 10th of December, three days after the second, and transmitted to the secretary of state, containing a tabular and specific statement of the vote of Arkansas County, as cast at the several precincts. The certificate declares that on examining the poll books it is ascertained that "A. H. Garland received 195 votes and J. P. Johnson 135 votes," and that this "is a true and correct abstract of the vote as returned from the several precincts in said county."

The evidence of these returns consists in authenticated transcripts of papers on file in the office of the secretary of state. Two such transcripts were before the committee. One of them was filed by contestant with his petition and referred, containing the first and third returns only. The other was offered before the committee by the sitting member and contained the first and second returns.

By the first return A. H. Garland is elected by a plurality of 32 votes; by the second he is elected by a plurality of 18 votes; and by the last return J. P. Johnson is elected by a plurality of 8 votes. Accompanying the transcripts and certified by the same authority was a copy of an explanatory letter or statement from the clerk, of the date of the last return, which as an unsworn declaration, and not of the kind required to be officially made, and thus become a record, your committee did not consider themselves at liberty to regard as evidence.

According to the laws of Arkansas regulating elections, and which may be found in Gould's Digest, chapter 62, two poll books of election are kept by the judges at each place of balloting, one of which they retain in their own hands for public inspection, and the other is deposited within three days with the county court clerk. On the fifth day after an election, and sooner if the returns from the precincts are all in, these poll books are to be compared and an abstract thereof made out and sent by mail to the secretary of state. If the returns have not been sent in, the clerk is required to dispatch a messenger after such as are missing, and in this case seven days are allowed for comparing the polls. The duty of comparing the polls and preparing the abstract is to be performed by the clerk and two justices of the peace, and if the latter can not be conveniently had, two sworn householders, in place of the justices, and this abstract, with the certificate of at least two of the number attached, must be transmitted as already stated.

The statute directs the secretary of state, if he fail to receive the abstracts for the two next succeeding mails after they are due, to send for such as are wanting, and when all have been received, or within thirty days if they have not, to cast up the votes from the different counties, in presence of the governor, and ascertain the result. And the governor is directed immediately thereupon, by proclamation, to announce the same and award his certificate.

The ballots themselves, cast at the several places of voting, are also required to be deposited by the judges with the county court clerk.

The attention of the committee has been called to the act of the Congress of the United States of February 19, 1851, in reference to contested elections and its bearing upon the case. This act requires a contestant to give notice of his intention to contest to the party declared to be elected, within thirty days thereafter, and therein to specify particularly the grounds upon which he proposes to contest the right of the latter to his seat.

It requires the party thus notified, within thirty days thereafter, to deliver to the contestant a copy of his answer, which must admit or deny the allegations made in the notice.

The other provisions of the statute relate mostly to the methods of taking proofs, and limit the evidence to the matters put in issue.

Various questions are presented upon this statement of the case, to which the attention of your committee has been directed, and which they believe are disposed of in the conclusions to which they have come and which they will proceed briefly to announce.

THE NOTICE.

The committee is of opinion that the notice given to Mr. Garland, on the 23d of December, as admitted by him, although less specific in its terms than it might have been made, conforms, nevertheless, substantially to the requirements of the act, and is sufficient. It distinctly assigns error in the returns from Arkansas County, the correction of which by the poll books would make a relative change of 40 votes, and reversing the result, elect contestant by a plurality of 8 votes.

The election of Mr. Garland is impeached on this ground and the notice directs his attention to it.

Your committee can not allow to the failure of the sitting member to answer the allegations in the notice, the effect, without other proofs, of dispossessing him of his seat, and still less of admitting contestant in his place. Analogies drawn from rules of pleading and practice, adopted in legal tribunals in the investigation of personal controversies and which affect individual interests only, are entirely inapplicable to questions involving the privileges of the House and the political rights of constituencies and States. Nor is there anything in the act of Congress which gives countenance to the argument based upon them. In the judgment of your committee the range of their inquiries must be more comprehensive, and they are to ascertain who is elected and entitled to the disputed seat. If the evidence require, they may refuse the seat to both contestants and award it to a party not before them.

Your committee will not stop to point out all the difficulties of a proposition which requires them to take as conclusive the unanswered averments of a notice. They will present but a single one. Suppose there were two contestants, neither of whose notice is answered, to whom shall the seat be given? Or can the party in possession of the certificate, by answering one and refusing to answer the other, at his own pleasure transfer the seat to the one he may prefer? And might not a person ineligible under the Constitution by this means become a member of the House? Your committee could not then properly arrest the inquiries they are charged to make as to the right to the contested seat, but proceeded to examine such evidence as was produced before them in order to determine upon its sufficiency to warrant them in reversing the decision of the governor of the State.

It is to be observed that there are three distinct, independent, and essentially conflicting abstracts, each certified by the officer having in custody the original, as true and made up from the one set of poll books in his office. Of these, the first only is within the extreme limit allowed by law, and is accepted and acted on by the governor. It is certified by a deputy clerk, authorized by law, a justice of the peace, and a householder, and in form complies with the requisitions of law. It does not appear that McDonald, the householder, was sworn, and if the averment of his being sworn is deemed necessary to the validity of his act, which the committee are not prepared to admit, still the attestation of the other two is good and sufficient under the statute. It might be further suggested, if parol proof were inadmissible to show that he was sworn (and of this there seems to be no just grounds of doubt), whether the governor must not be assumed to have had evidence of whatever was material to the validity of the return when he acted upon it. The second return is the act of but a single officer and was prepared more than a month after the election. The third return is unobjectionable in form, but was made up still later, and could not have reached the secretary of state until the count required of him had been made and the result of the election ascertained and declared. This must be apparent from the fact that the return and proclamation bear the same date.

But the committee are not restricted as was the governor, and whether he should have considered the last return or not, they are to ascertain the true state of the vote. Upon the proofs before them, they are unable to report the vote of Arkansas County as differing from that declared in the proclamation. They know no principle upon which preponderance is to be given to the last of the conflicting returns over the first. Whether the discrepancy is the consequence of clerical error or results from alterations made in the books during the interval—or because one is partial and the other full—or from some other cause, your committee will not undertake to infer, in the absence of any just principle of evidence upon which such inference can be made. Official papers returned within time ought to be invalidated by others not so returned only upon clear and satisfactory proof of error. Such proof has not been given to your committee.

It is obvious that the only means of arriving at the true vote of Arkansas County would be the production of the poll books themselves, of which there should be double sets, or authenticated copies direct from the office in which they are kept. This evidence would reveal the correct vote, while conflicting abstracts or copies successively sent to another office and thence certified to us never can. Or parol evidence might be produced in support of the correct return if either be correct, and of the actual vote if none are. The preservation of the ballots would facilitate the inquiry. Neither party has resorted to this original and primary source of evidence, in its nature decisive of the facts.

The sitting member holds his place upon the floor by the adjudication of the House in his prima facie title under the governor's certificate. Your committee can not upon the facts before them deprive him of the advantages he thus holds and undertake to reverse the action of the executive authority of Arkansas.

After the committee had proceeded thus far in their investigations and conclusions upon the evidence before them, an application was made by contestant, supported by affidavit, for time to take other and further testimony as to the vote of the county of Arkansas. The committee understood the sitting member to ask that the privilege should be granted to him to take further evidence generally, provided any time is granted for the purpose asked by contestant. Your committee admit that the evidence submitted by contestant, though insufficient for the purpose of ousting the sitting member, for reasons already stated, is yet of such force as to entitle the application for further time to respectful consideration. And as this is the first contested election case under our Government, as its decision and the rules established by it will be for manifest reasons entitled hereafter to much weight as a precedent, and as several of your committee seriously doubt whether the act of the Congress of the United States in such cases is of binding force, and certainly was not observed by either party thus far, your committee, seeing that no damage could result to either the contestant or sitting member or their constituency, resolved, as far as possible and justice would admit, to seek to establish such a rule as would be a guide in future cases.

Your committee propose to act upon the case as if it had just arisen, and to suggest a reasonable time wherein a contestant must give notice of his purpose to contest, the time in which a sitting member must reply to such notice, and the time and rules, etc., in which and under which evidence shall be taken. They propose that this House shall formally adopt the rules prescribed by the act of the Congress of the United States, and thus add to whatever force they may now have the solemn sanction of the House in the first contested election case that comes before it.

They therefore report the following resolutions:

Resolved, First. That thirty days be allowed to contestant to amend his notice if he so desires.

Second. That the sitting member be allowed thirty days after such amendment made and notice thereof, or after notice of contestant's declining to amend, in which to make and serve his answer thereto on contestant, setting out in said answer the ground on which he rests the validity of his own and denies the election of contestant.

Third. That after service of the answer or expiration of the time limited therefor, sixty days be allowed the parties to take evidence, which shall be confined to the allegations and denials contained in the notice and answer, and that the same be taken and transmitted to the House, under the rules prescribed by the act of the Congress of the United States, approved February nineteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections."

W. N. H. SMITH, Chairman, etc.

Mr. Jones, by the consent of the House, offered

And the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. Holt moved to amend the resolution of Mr. Kenan by substituting therefor the following, to wit:

Resolved, That officers of the Confederate Army mustered into the Confederate service, irrespective of the fact whether commissioned by State or Confederate authority, are not entitled to seats on this floor, unless they resign their commissions in the Army, and that any such officers now members of this House shall be entitled to retain their seats upon such resignation.

Mr. Swan moved to amend the amendment of Mr. Holt by substituting therefor the following, to wit:

Whereas it appears that Roger A. Pryor, William Smith, John B. Baldwin, of Virginia, and Julian Hartridge, of Georgia, have respectively been commissioned by the governors of the States above mentioned, the first three named as colonels commanding regiments, and the last as lieutenant of artillery of volunteers, which commissions they have not resigned; and

Whereas it further appears that the regiments, with the colonels commanding, and the company commanded by Lieutenant Hartridge have been mustered into the service of the Confederate States; and

Whereas it further appears that the persons above named are occupying seats upon the floor of this House: Be it therefore Resolved, That the Committee on Elections inquire and report whether the said Roger A. Pryor, William Smith, John B. Baldwin, and Julian Hartridge are entitled to places on this floor as members of this House.

Pending which,

A message was received from the Senate, by their Secretary, Mr. Nash; which is as follows:

The amendment offered by Mr. Swan was then ruled out of order by the Chair.

Mr. Russell, by consent, moved to amend the resolution of Mr. Kenan of Georgia by adding the following, to wit:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the respective States have exclusive authority, under the Constitution, to appoint officers of the militia, whether volunteer militia or others; and such officers, when appointed by the States, do not cease to be State officers or become officers "holding office under the Confederate States" when they and the militia under their command are in the service of the Confederate States, receiving pay from them and being subject to their control and government.

Resolved, That the respective States had authority during the Provisional Government to raise and keep troops both in peace and in war, and have authority now to raise and keep troops in time of war and to appoint the officers thereof; and such officers, when appointed by the respective States, do not cease to be State officers or become officers "holding office under the Confederate States" when in time of war they and the troops under their command are, with the consent of their respective States, receiving pay from them and being subject to their control and government for the purposes of the war, but without commissions from the Confederate States.

Resolved, That under the Constitution and laws of the Confederate States no person can hold a military office under the Confederate States of a grade requiring a commission unless he be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, and receive a commission from the President.

The previous question was then ordered.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Richmond, Va., March 25, 1862.

To the House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

In answer to your resolution of the 21st instant, calling upon the President for information in regard to the protection of our principal cities from iron-plated vessels by means of obstructions and submarine batteries, and whether any additional appropriations are needed for these objects, I have to state generally that the channels of approach to our principal cities have been, and are being, obstructed according to the means at hand; that submarine batteries have been, and are being, prepared, and that no additional appropriations for these objects are considered to be needed.

Until recently the character of the enemy's iron-plated vessels was not well enough known to arrange obstructions specially for them, but the same principle obtains, and the obstructions already prepared can be strengthened when necessary.

For the want of insulated wire we are deprived of that class of submarine batteries exploded at will by electricity, which promises the best results. Experiments upon several kinds of such as are exploded by impact have been in progress since an early period of the war.

These torpedoes can be rendered harmless by the enemy in most cases by setting adrift floating bodies to explode them, as is said to have been done on the Mississippi River, and as they can not be put in place so long as all the channels are required for use by our own boats, no great degree of importance is attached to them.

They may serve, however, to gain time by making the enemy more cautious; and most of our seacoast defenses have already received, or will as soon as practicable receive, a certain supply of them.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Whereas the present unholy and sanguinary war owes its accursed origin alone to Yankee cupidity and a semibarbarous and insatiable lust for political domination; and

Whereas the unvarying history of the past has been such as to afford unequivocal evidence that the Confederate States have at no time claimed anything at the hands of their late Northern allies save to be let alone and to be permitted to enjoy in peace the invaluable right of self-government; and

Whereas in the earlier stages of the war the whole South, with that moderation and disinterestedness which have ever marked her people, would have been entirely content with being allowed to withdraw forever from a union which had become to them a source of continued injustice and oppression, and were even willing in thus withdrawing to relinquish their unquestionable right to a proportionate share of the public domain and other articles of common property; and

Whereas the military struggle now in progress has been going on with varying results for more than twelve months, increasing every moment in its mischievous effects, and in the ferocious spirit with which it is waged by our unprincipled adversaries; and

Whereas it has been now most clearly demonstrated by experience that our soldiers are far superior to those of the enemy in courage, in energy, and in patient endurance of suffering and hardship, and that in all the essential military resources, except ironclad steamers and ordinary munitions of war, the Southern States are altogether superior to their selfish and mercenary foes; and

Whereas even in regard to these, it has recently become quite evident that by an enlightened and prudent husbanding of the cotton and tobacco, we shall be in a short time fully able to cope with the vandals of the North, both upon the water and the land; and

Whereas there has not been the least abatement either in the courage or the energy of our Southern soldiers under recent military disasters, but that, on the contrary, our armies and our whole people have of late become greatly more enthusiastic and resolute and far more confident as to the ultimate result of our struggle for independence: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the manifest and universal wish of the people of the Confederate States that the war should be hereafter prosecuted with all proper vigor and enterprise, and that should the President call upon Congress for an army of a million of soldiers, and for an appropriation of two thousand millions of money, and should he deem it expedient, after driving the marauding foe beyond our confines, to carry the war into the enemy's country with a view to obtaining full indemnity for the past and security for the future, he will deserve, as he will assuredly receive, the hearty and united support of Congress and of the people.

The Chair presented a message from the President; which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and is as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, March 28, 1862.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

The operation of the various laws now in force for raising armies has exhibited the necessity for reform. The frequent changes and amendments which have been made have rendered the system so complicated as to make it often quite difficult to determine what the law really is, and to what extent prior enactments are modified by more recent legislation.

There is also embarrassment from conflict between State and Confederate legislation. I am happy to assure you of the entire harmony of purpose and cordiality of feeling which have continued to exist between myself and the executives of the several States; and it is to this cause that our success in keeping adequate forces in the field is to be attributed.

These reasons would suffice for inviting your earnest attention to the necessity of some simple and general system for exercising the power of raising armies which is vested in the Congress by the Constitution. But there is another and more important consideration. The vast preparations made by the enemy for a combined assault at numerous points on our frontier and seacoast have produced the result that might have been expected. They have animated the people with a spirit of resistance so general, so resolute, and so self-sacrificing that it requires rather to be regulated than to be stimulated. The right of the State to demand, and the duty of each citizen to render, military service need only to be stated to be admitted. It is not, however, wise or judicious policy to place in active service that portion of the force of a people which experience has shown to be necessary as a reserve. Youths under the age of 18 years require further instruction—men of matured experience are needed for maintaining order and good government at home, and in supervising preparations for rendering efficient the armies in the field. These two classes constitute the proper reserve for home defense, ready to be called out in case of emergency, and to be kept in the field only while the emergency exists. But, in order to maintain this reserve intact, it is necessary that, in a great war like that in which we are now engaged, all persons of intermediate age not legally exempt for good cause should pay their debt of military service to the country, that the burthens should not fall exclusively on the most ardent and patriotic.

I, therefore, recommend the passage of a law declaring that all persons residing within the Confederate States, between the ages of 18 and 35 years, and rightfully subject to military duty, shall be held to be in the military service of the Confederate States, and that some plain and simple method be adopted for their prompt enrollment and organization, repealing all of the legislation heretofore enacted which would conflict with the system proposed.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The Chair laid before the House a communication from the President, as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States of America:

The great importance of the news just received from Tennessee induces me to depart from established usage, and to make to you this communication in advance of official reports.

From telegraphic dispatches received from official sources, I am able to announce to you, with entire confidence, that it has pleased Almighty God to crown the Confederate arms with a glorious and decisive victory over our invaders.

On the morning of the 6th instant the converging columns of our army were combined by its commander in chief, Gen. A. S. Johnston, in an assault on the Federal army, then encamped near Pittsburg, on the Tennessee River. After a hard fought battle of ten hours the enemy was driven in disorder from his position and pursued to the Tennessee River, where, under cover of his gunboats, he was at the last accounts endeavoring to effect his retreat by aid of his transports. The details of this great battle are yet too few and incomplete to enable me to distinguish with merited praise all of those who may have conspicuously earned the right to such distinction; and I prefer to delay my own gratification in recommending them to your special notice rather than incur the risk of wounding the feelings of any by failing to include them in the list. Where such a victory has been won over troops as numerous, as well disciplined, armed, and appointed, as those which have just been so signally routed, we may well conclude that one common spirit of unflinching bravery and devotion to our country's cause must have animated every breast, from that of the commanding general to that of the humblest patriot who served in the ranks.

There is enough in the continued presence of invaders on our soil to chasten our exultation over this brilliant success, and to remind us of the grave duty of continued exertion until we shall extort from a proud and vain-glorious enemy the reluctant acknowledgment of our right to self-government. But an all-wise Creator has been pleased, while vouchsafing to us his countenance in battle, to afflict us with a severe dispensation to which we must bow in humble submission.

The last lingering hope has disappeared, and it is but too true that Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston is no more. The tale of his death is simply narrated in a dispatch just received from Col. William Preston in the following words:

"General Johnston fell yesterday at half past 2 o'clock, while leading a successful charge, turning the enemy's right and gaining a brilliant victory. A minie ball cut the artery of his leg, but he rode on till from loss of blood he fell exhausted, and died without pain in a few moments. His body has been intrusted to me by General Beauregard, to be taken to New Orleans, and remain until directions are received from his family."

My long and close friendship with this departed chieftain and patriot forbid me to trust myself in giving vent to the feelings which this sad intelligence has evoked. Without doing injustice to the living, it may be safely asserted that our loss is irreparable, and that among the shining hosts of the great and good who now cluster around the banner of our country, there exists no purer spirit, no more heroic soul, than that of the illustrious man whose death I join you in lamenting.

In his death he has illustrated the character for which, through life, he was conspicuous—that of singleness of purpose and devotion to duty. With his whole energies bent on attaining the victory which he deemed essential to his country's cause, he rode on to the accomplishment of his object, forgetful of self, while his very life-blood was fast ebbing away. His last breath cheered his comrades to victory. The last sound he heard was their shout of triumph. His last thought was his country's, and long and deeply will his country mourn his loss.

The bill was taken up, and having been read as follows:

The Congress of the Confederate States do enact, That during the blockade of the ports of the Confederate States, the cargo of any vessel may be discharged at any place or port at which the vessel may arrive, whether the same be a port of entry or delivery established by law or not: Provided, That the master or other person in command shall before breaking bulk make entry of such vessel and her cargo and comply with all other requirements of the law at the nearest port of entry where it is practicable so to do,

Mr. Perkins moved to amend by striking out all of the bill after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

That it shall be lawful for vessels to unload their cargoes on any part of the coast of the Confederate States, and that the laws requiring entry of vessels or discharge of their cargoes at designated ports, and prescribing penalties for failure to do so, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Curry, from the same committee, reported and recommended the passage of which was read first and second [times].

The rules were suspended;

The bill was taken up, engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Royston, from the same committee, to whom was referred joint resolutions of the legislature of the State of Louisiana in reference to postal affairs, reported the same back, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that the resolutions lie on the table; which was agreed to.

Mr. Chilton, from the same committee, to whom was referred sundry petitions on the subject of Sunday mails, made a report; which is as follows, to wit:

SUNDAY MAIL.

Report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom sundry memorials were referred against the transportation and opening of the mails on Sundays, report:

That the subject-matter of the memorials was several times before the Congress of the United States, and several elaborate reports were made thereon. These reports, which were adverse to the prayer of the petitioners, your committee have examined with care, especially that made by the Hon. Richard M. Johnson, on the 4th of March, 1830, which was regarded as an able exposition of the matter, and received very generally with favor, but which, when closely analyzed, will be found sophistical and unsatisfactory in its reasoning and conclusion, while much is contained in it to admire and applaud.

We heartily assent to the great fundamental truth, that no free government should ever interfere in matters of religion to control the religious faith and consciences of men. Our excellent Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," and every effort tending, however remotely, to obtain legislative interference in the establishment of religious creeds should be indignantly rejected as a stab upon religion itself, the liberty of conscience, and the freedom of thought.

It does not follow, however, from what we have said, that Congress should, by its legislation, ignore the existence and overruling Providence of the Supreme Being, or enact laws in contravention of His known will. No sane mind would for a moment conceive that the framers of our Constitution, in the very outset of our Government, in view of the trials and difficulties which awaited us, in view of the fact that in all probability we should soon be required intended to give any sanction to the establishment of religion by law, or to interpose in behalf of any religious creed, when "invoking the favor and guidance of Almighty God," they ordained and established our fundamental law. No one would suppose that the opening of our sessions by solemn invocations offered up by pious ministers to Almighty God for wisdom to direct and strength to support us in the faithful discharge of our duties, was an unconstitutional interference in matters of religion. Neither has it been deemed unconstitutional to appoint chaplains in the Army, that they may minister to the intellectual, moral, and religious culture of our troops; that they may come round the bed of the sick or wounded soldier, and by "pointing the way" wreath the haggard countenance of death with the smiles of joy as the hope of a happy immortality becomes the sunlight of the soul.

"To bathe our infant liberties

The memorialists do not propose that Congress should, by law, declare that any day, or any portion of time, has been set apart by the Almighty for religious exercises. Congress has no such power. Its sphere of legitimate legislation is quite limited, being bounded by the express grant of powers contained in the Constitution. They merely ask that Congress shall not by affirmative legislation do violence to religion and the moral sense of the community, by requiring the mail to be carried, opened, or distributed and delivered on the Christian Sabbath. And is it unconstitutional for Congress to decline the violation of the Sabbath day? Such was the conclusion at which the committee arrived in the celebrated report of Mr. Johnson. Then it follows that it is unconstitutional for Congress to decline holding sessions on the Sabbath day. By parity of reasoning it should require all its agents in every department of the Government to continue their usual routine of duties and labors on the Sabbath. If it be necessary to have the mail carried and opened on the Sabbath, as a matter of public convenience, it is equally necessary that the judicial courts should be kept open on the Sabbath, the Constitution providing for a speedy trial. Why are they not kept open? Out of respect for the Christian Sabbath. Why are the doors of this hall closed on the Sabbath? It is because of our reverence for religion, and from a decent respect for the Christian constituency who send us here, whose moral sense would be shocked by a desecration of the day, in devoting it to the usual purposes of legislation.

In the old Government, such petitions as those before us, were regarded as covert attempts to obtain the recognition, by law, of one religious dogma as a pretext for another and another still, until some sects should become established, and, panoplied with the power of the State, should triumph over its opposers and introduce all the horrors of "the holy inquisition." We were exhorted to remember "that Cataline, a professed patriot, was a traitor to Rome; Arnold, a professed Whig, a traitor to America; and Judas, a professed disciple, was a traitor to his Divine Master." While the committee feel well assured that no such object animates the petitioners who seek this reform, the rhetorical flourish which we have quoted may serve to suggest, that while the Confederate States Government in its fundamental law professes to "invoke the favor and guidance of Almighty God," it should not be guilty of treason by trampling His statutes under foot, and setting His authority at defiance.

Your committee will not go into an examination as to the foundation of the obligation to observe the Sabbath as a day of rest, of worship, and for moral and religious improvement. Whether it be deducible from the nature of our Constitution as essential to our physical, as well as moral and spiritual development, or from the decalogue, as a positive institution, or from the practice and example of the Apostles and Christians from their day to the present, it is certain that the Christian people composing the States of this Confederacy, esteem it a day set apart by Divine appointment for rest from secular employment, and to be dedicated to worship and moral culture. It is equally certain that they concur in the opinion that its desecration is a sin, and the sole question is, shall the Government continue unnecessarily to desecrate it. Shall it, in the absence of some overruling necessity, deny to a large number of its employees the privileges of the sanctuary, and the means it affords for moral and religious improvement? Your committee believe that this should not be done. The stoppage of the mail one day in seven would not materially interfere with the revenues of the Post-Office Department, while it would considerably lessen the cost of transportation. It will be remembered that under the Constitution the Department must be self-sustaining by the 1st day of March, 1863, and this will contribute to produce that result. Besides, by curtailing the service on the main routes and thus lessening the expense, greater facilities can be afforded for sending the mails into the interior and poorer sections, where the revenue might not equal the expense.

The only real ground of objection which was urged to the proposed change, when this question was mooted in 1829 and 1830, was, that if the mails were stopped on Sunday, there might be sudden rises in the price of our great staples, and speculators would enrich themselves by sending couriers or expresses in advance of the mail, and taking advantage of the rise. This, however, is remedied by the modern invention of the telegraph, and the erection of numerous railroads and introduction of express companies; so that none of the evils then anticipated would be experienced now. The star-bid system on which contracts are now let out, has, in a great measure, dispensed with coaches as a means of carrying the mails; and your committee believe that very little inconvenience would result from ceasing to transmit them on Sunday.

It may, however, be said, we are in the midst of a great revolution, and that while it lasts it is important the mail service should not be curtailed. Your committee believe that the public interest will not suffer by it. The accounts of interesting events, battles, etc., are either sent by telegraph, or private persons, or express. They rarely go at the earliest moment by the mails, which delay at distributing offices for distribution. Besides, if one-seventh of the employees engaged in the mail service were transferred to the Army, it would constitute no inconsiderable addition; and if the rolling stock required for the mail on Sunday should be allowed to remain unemployed one-seventh of the time, some compensation might result, should the war be protracted, in its fitness to aid the Government in necessary transportation for a much longer period than it otherwise would. The fact, therefore, that we are engaged in a war furnishes an additional reason why we should postpone the mail service on the Sabbath. Superadded to all this, the fact that our Government in the commencement of its career, in the midst of the most bloody struggle for the maintenance of our rights, had paused to pay a tribute to virtue and religion, would present a spectacle of the morally sublime that would stand forth as a beacon light to the Christian nations of the earth; would show that as a nation "we honor not God with our lips, when our hearts are far from Him;" would furnish proof of the sincerity of our profession of reliance upon the favor and guidance of Him who "holds the destinies of all nations in His hands," and who "honors them that honor Him."

Whatever, therefore, may be the action of the House as to its concurrence in the views of the committee, they feel that in thus plainly and frankly laying them before the representatives of the people they have discharged their duty to themselves, their country, and their God. Their adoption or rejection is with the Congress. The opposite of these views have hitherto obtained ascendancy in the old Government, and, whether as a sequence or not, is a question which we may not decide; the finger of the Almighty has inscribed upon its walls "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." May the Confederate States profit by the example, and while eschewing all bigotry, whether political or religious, and all attempts to violate the rights of conscience, early learn that the only sure basis of national prosperity and happiness are the great principles of justice, morality, and religion, as taught in the revealed will of God, and that the Great Lawgiver will not suffer these principles to be violated with impunity. The fears expressed in reports upon this subject heretofore submitted to the old Congress, that should the Government repeal a law requiring a large number of its citizens to violate the Christian Sabbath, it would be the beginning of a series of acts which would end in the union of church and state, and entail upon the people all the persecution and horrors of the Spanish Inquisition, are utterly groundless and unworthy of patriots and Christian statesmen. The several States not only decline to pass laws requiring the violation of the Sabbath, but many, if not all of them, have penal enactments against its violation, and these have been enforced for many years. Why have not religious persecution, the "holy inquisition," and the "auto da fé" found a place in some of them? The common law, which is said to be "the perfection of reason," has always deferred to the Christian Sabbath, and sternly declares all contracts made on Sunday absolutely void. Why has not persecution followed its behest? No! Such enormities and cruelties result "to nations that forget God." They spring up when frenzied fanaticism has supplanted vital piety, and when "bigotry has murdered religion to frighten fools with her ghost." It is to forestall and prevent such results that your committee would urge upon Congress, thus early in the eventful history of our Republic, to blot out the laws of the old Government requiring the Sabbath to be violated. The example thus furnished of respect to piety and religion would permeate society and stimulate individuals to more orderly and virtuous lives. It is impossible to estimate the beneficent effects of such a moral reform upon the masses of our population. One of the wisest and best of men* was wont to say:

“A Sabbath well spent brings a week of content,
And a health for the toils of the morrow;
While a Sabbath profaned, what e'er may be gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow.”

However this may be, its needless profanation by the Government in the transmission and delivery and opening of the mails interferes with the worship of God, withdraws many from religious contemplation, deprives others of moral and religious culture, and furnishes an example of impiety which tends to demoralize our people. The right minded will readily distinguish between the usual mail service which may be stopped one day in seven without material detriment to any one, and those works of necessity and charity which may and ought to be done under the Divine license; “It is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day.”

In conclusion the committee recommend the following bill for the adoption of the Congress:

FIFTIETH DAY—WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Jeter.

Mr. Gaither, from the special committee to investigate the causes of the disaster at Roanoke Island, reported as follows, viz:

The committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives, instructing them "to inquire and report the causes and circumstances of the capitulation of Roanoke Island," have had the same under consideration; and have given all the facts and circumstances connected with the defenses of the said island and its adjacent waters, and of the capitulation on the 8th of February, a most elaborate investigation.

The committee find, that on the 21st day of August, 1861, Brigadier-General Gatlin was ordered to the command of the Department of North Carolina and the coast defenses of that State. On the 29th of September, Brig. Gen. D. H. Hill was assigned to duty in North Carolina and charged with the defenses of that portion of said State lying between Albemarle Sound and the Neuse River and Pamlico Sound, including those waters, and was directed to report to Brigadier-General Gatlin.

On the 16th of November, Brig. Gen. L. O. Branch was directed to relieve Brigadier-General Hill, in command of his district in North Carolina. On the 21st of December, that part of North Carolina east of the Chowan River, together with the counties of Washington and Tyrrell, was, at the request of the proper authorities of North Carolina, separated from the remainder, and constituted into a military district, under Brig. Gen. H. A. Wise, and attached to the command of Major-General Huger, commanding the Department of Norfolk. At the time, therefore, of the surrender of Roanoke Island, on the 8th of February, 1862, it was within the military district of Brigadier-General Wise, and attached to the command of Major-General Huger.

The military defenses of Roanoke Island and its adjacent waters, on the said 8th of February, 1862, consisted of Fort Bartow, the most southern of the defenses on the west side of the island—a sand fort, well covered with turf, having six long 32-pounder guns in embrasure and three 32-pounders en barbette. The next is Fort Blanchard, on the same side of the island, about two and one-half miles from Fort Bartow—a semicircular sand fort, turfed, and mounting four 32-pounders en barbette.

Next, on the same side, and about one thousand two hundred yards from Fort Blanchard, is Fort Huger. This is a turfed sand fort, running along the line of the beach, and closed in the rear by a low breastwork, with a banquette for infantry. It contained eight 32-pounder guns in embrasure, two rifled 32-pounders en barbette, and two small 32-pounders en barbette on the right.

About three miles below Fort Bartow, on the east side of the island, was a battery of two 32-pounder guns en barbette, at a point known as Midgett's Hammock. In the center of the island, about two miles from Fort Bartow, and a mile from Midgett's Hammock, was a redoubt or breastwork, thrown across the road, about seventy or eighty feet long, with embrasures for three guns, on the right of which was a swamp, on the left a marsh, the redoubt reaching nearly between them and facing to the south. On the Tyrrell side, on the main land, nearly opposite to Fort Huger, was Fort Forrest, mounting seven 32-pounders.

In addition to these defenses on the shore and on the island, there was a barrier of piles, extending from the east side of Falker Shoals toward the island. Its object was to compel vessels passing on the west of the island to approach within reach of the shore batteries; but up to the 8th of February there was a span of 1,700 yards open opposite to Fort Bartow. Some vessels had been sunk and piles driven on the west side of Falker Shoals, to obstruct the channel between that shoal and the main land, which comprise all the defenses either upon the land or in the waters adjacent.

The entire military force stationed upon the island prior to and at the time of the late engagement, consisted of the Eighth Regiment of North Carolina State Troops, under the command of Col. H. M. Shaw, the Thirty-first Regiment of North Carolina Volunteers, under the command of Col. J. V. Jordan, and three companies of the Seventeenth North Carolina Troops, under the command of Maj. G. H. Hill. After manning the several forts, on the 7th of February, there were but 1,024 men left, and 200 of them were upon the sick list. On the evening of the 7th of February, Brigadier-General Wise sent from Nagg's Head, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Anderson, a reenforcement, numbering some four hundred and fifty men. This does not include the commands of Lieutenant-Colonel Green and Major Fry, both of whom marched to the scene of action after the battle was closed. The committee do not think there was any intentional delay in the landing of the commands of Colonel Green and Major Fry. The former, Colonel Green, exhibited great anxiety to get into the fight, when he did land, and acted with great gallantry in the skirmish he did have with the enemy in the vicinity of the camp.

The whole under the command of Brigadier-General Wise, who, upon the 7th and 8th February, was at Nagg's Head, four miles distant from the island, confined to a sick bed, and entirely disabled from participating in the action in person. The immediate command therefore devolved upon Col. H. M. Shaw, the senior officer present.

On the 6th of February it was discovered by the companies on picket duty on the south end of the island that the enemy's fleet was in Pamlico Sound, south of Roanoke Island, and, apparently, intending to attack the forces upon the island. Colonel Shaw immediately communicated the fact to Brigadier-General Wise, and issued orders for the disposition of his troops preparatory to an engagement. The points at which it was supposed the enemy would attempt to land troops were Ashby's and Pugh's landings. Ashby's is situated on the west side of the island, about two miles south of Fort Bartow, and Pugh's on the same side, about two miles south of Ashby's.

On the night of the 6th, or early in the morning of the 7th, a detachment, with one piece of artillery, was sent to Pugh's Landing, and one, with two pieces of artillery, was sent to Ashby's, and the remainder of the forces was stationed in the immediate vicinity of Ashby's. On the morning of the 7th the enemy's fleet passed by both of the landings and proceeded toward Fort Bartow; and the detachment of infantry stationed at Pugh's immediately fell back to the vicinity of Ashby's Landing and joined the detachments there, all under command of Col. J. V. Jordan.

In the sound, between Roanoke Island and the main land, upon the Tyrrell side, Commodore Lynch, with his squadron of seven vessels, had taken position, and at 11 o'clock the enemy's fleet, consisting of about thirty gunboats and schooners, advanced in ten divisions, the rear one having the schooners and transports in tow. The advance and attacking division again subdivided, one assailing the squadron and the other firing upon the fort with nine-inch, ten-inch, and eleven-inch shell, spherical case, a few round shot, and every variety of rifled projectiles. The fort replied with but four guns (which were all that could be brought to bear), and after striking the foremost vessel several times the fleet fell back, so as to mask one of the guns of the fort, leaving but three to reply to the fire of the whole fleet. The bombardment was continued through the day, and the enemy retired at dark. The squadron under the command of Commodore Lynch sustained their position most gallantly, and only retired after exhausting all their ammunition, and having lost the steamer Curlew and the Forrest disabled. Fort Bartow sustained considerable damage from the fire of the day, but the injuries were partially repaired by the next morning and the fort put in a state of defense.

About 3.30 o'clock on the morning of the 7th the enemy sent off from his transports about twenty-five men in a launch, apparently to take soundings, who were fired upon and retreated, whereupon two large steamers having in tow each thirty boats, filled with troops, approached the island, under the protection of their gunboats, at a point north of Ashby's Landing, known as Haymon's, and did effect a landing. The point selected was out of the reach of the field pieces at Ashby's, and defended by a swamp from the advance of our infantry, and protected by the shot and shell from their gunboats. Our whole force therefore withdrew from Ashby's and took position at the redoubt or breastwork, and placed in battery their field pieces, with necessary artillerymen, under the respective commands of Captain Schermerhorn, Lieutenants Kinney and Seldon. Two companies of the Eighth and two of the Thirty-first were placed at the redoubt to support the artillery. Three companies of the Wise Legion deployed to the right and left as skirmishers, the remainder of the infantry in position 300 yards in the rear of the redoubt as a reserve.

The enemy landed some fifteen thousand men, with artillery, and at 7 o'clock a. m. of the 8th opened fire upon the redoubt, which was replied to immediately with great spirit, and the action soon became general, and was continued without intermission for more than five hours, when the enemy succeeded in deploying a large force on either side of our line, flanking each wing. The order was then given by Colonel Shaw to spike the guns in the battery and to retreat to the northern end of the island. The guns were spiked, and the whole force fell back to the camps.

During the engagement at the redoubt the enemy's fleet attempted to advance up Croatan Sound, which brought on a desultory engagement between Fort Bartow and the fleet, which continued up to half after 12 o'clock, when the commanding officer was informed that, the land defenses had been forced and the position of the fort turned. He therefore ordered the guns to be disabled and the ammunition destroyed, which was done and the fort abandoned. The same thing was done at Forts Blanchard and Huger, and the forces from all the forts were marched in good order to the camps. The enemy took possession of the redoubt and forts immediately, and proceeded in pursuit with great caution toward the northern end of the island in force, deploying so as to surround our forces at the camps. Colonel Shaw, having arrived with his whole force at his camp in time to have saved his whole command if transports had been furnished, but none being there, and finding himself surrounded by a greatly superior force upon the open island, with no field works to protect him, and having lost his only three field pieces at the redoubt, had either to make an idle display of courage in fighting the foe at such immense disadvantage to the sacrifice of his command or to capitulate and surrender as prisoners of war. He wisely determined upon the latter alternative.

The loss on our side in killed and wounded and missing is as follows: Killed, 23; wounded, 58; missing, 62. The loss of the Forty-sixth and Fifty-ninth Virginia Volunteers is: killed, 6; wounded, 28; missing, 19. That of the Eighth and Thirty-first and Second North Carolina State Troops is: 16 killed; 30 wounded; 43 missing. Of the Engineer Department, Lieutenant Seldon, killed, who had patriotically volunteered his services in the line, was assigned to the command of the 6-pounder, which he handled with so much skill as to produce immense havoc in the enemy's ranks, and to elicit the unbounded admiration of all who witnessed it. Unhappily, however, that gallant officer received a rifle ball in the head, and he fell without a groan.

The loss of the enemy was, in killed and wounded, at least 900, and the probability is a much larger number.

The foregoing is a brief and concise view of the defenses of Roanoke Island and of the adjacent waters, the number of our troops engaged on the 7th and 8th of February, and the circumstances of the capitulation thereof on the 8th of February. The committee are satisfied that Colonel Shaw held the possession of that post as long as he could have done without a useless sacrifice of human life. That on the 7th and 8th, the officers and men in Fort Bartow displayed great coolness and courage and persevering effort to sustain their position and drive back the enemy's fleet.

In the battle of the 8th of February, at the redoubt, the officers and men exhibited a cool and deliberate courage, worthy of veterans in the service, and sustained their position under an uninterrupted and deadly fire for more than five hours, repulsing the enemy in three separate and distinct charges, and only withdrew from the deadly conflict after exhausting their ammunition for their artillery, and being surrounded and flanked by more than ten times their number. Instead of the result being "deeply humiliating," it was one of the most brilliant and gallant actions of the war, and in the language of their absent commanding general, "both officers and men fought firmly, coolly, efficiently, and as long as humanity would allow."

The committee are satisfied that the whole command did their duty, and they do not feel at liberty to designate any particular acts of companies or individuals. But in simple justice to Colonel Shaw (upon whom devolved the command by reason of the extreme illness of his superior, General Wise, and who has been censured for the result) the committee take pleasure in stating that there is no foundation for any just reflection upon him. He, upon the 7th of February, after disposing of his infantry force, and finding that the enemy did not intend landing, repaired immediately, in person, to Fort Bartow, where the bombardment was progressing, and made his way into the fort amidst the most imminent danger from shot and shell; and there remained, encouraging the men and assisting as far as he was able, until he discovered the enemy intended to effect a landing below, when he left the fort, under the same dangerous circumstances of the morning, to take command of the infantry in person; and upon the 8th, at the redoubt, he commanded in person, sharing the dangers of his men for more than five hours, with a firmness, coolness, and bravery worthy of the position he occupied.

Immediately upon the secession of the State of North Carolina from the Government of the United States, and the adoption of the Constitution of the Confederate States of America, the authorities of that State commenced the construction of fortifications at Hatteras and Oregon Inlet, and other points upon her coast, which were not completed when the State transferred her forts, arsenals, army, navy, and coast defenses to the Confederate Government. Shortly thereafter the attack was made upon Forts Hatteras and Clark, and they were taken, and the fortifications at Oregon Inlet were abandoned, and the armament, stores, and ammunition were removed to Roanoke Island. The enemy immediately appeared in force in Pamlico Sound, the waters of which are connected with Albemarle and Currituck sounds by means of the two smaller sounds of Croatan and Roanoke. The island of Roanoke being situated between these two latter sounds, commanding the channels of either, became, upon the fall of Hatteras and the abandonment of Oregon Inlet, only second in importance to Fortress Monroe. That island, then, became the key which unlocked all northeastern North Carolina to the enemy, and exposed Portsmouth and Norfolk to a rear approach of the most imminent danger. In the language of Brigadier-General Wise, "That such is the importance and value, in a military point of view, of Roanoke Island that it ought to have been defended by all the means in the power of the Government. It was the key to all the rear defenses of Norfolk. It unlocked two sounds, Albemarle and Currituck; eight rivers, the North, West, Pasquotank, the Perquimans, the Little, the Chowan, the Roanoke, and the Alligator; four canals, the Albemarle and Chesapeake, the Dismal Swamp, the Northwest Canal, and the Suffolk; two railroads, the Petersburg and Norfolk and the Seaboard and Roanoke. It guarded more than four-fifths of all Norfolk's supplies of corn, pork, and forage, and it cut the command of General Huger off from all of its most efficient transportation. It endangers the subsistence of his whole army, threatens the navy-yard at Gosport, and to cut off Norfolk from Richmond, and both from railroad communication with the South. It lodges the enemy in a safe harbor from the storms of Hatteras, gives them a rendezvous and large rich range of supplies, and the command of the seaboard from Oregon Inlet to Cape Henry. It should have been defended at the expense of 20,000 men and of many millions of dollars."

The committee are of the opinion that the island of Roanoke was a military post of great importance; that it might have been placed in a state of defense against any reasonable force with the expenditure of money and labor, supposed to be within the means of the Government; that the same was not done and the defenses constructed were wholly inadequate for its protection from an attack either by land or water. And the committee have no difficulty in assigning, as the cause of our disaster and defeat on the 8th of February, the want of the necessary defenses upon the island and the adjacent waters and upon the mainland upon the Tyrrell side; the want of the necessary field artillery, armament, and ammunition, and the great and unpardonable deficiency of men, together with the entire want of transportation, by which the whole command might have been conveyed from the island after the defeat at the battery.

But the committee have had much difficulty in locating the responsibility for the neglect of this exceedingly important point, owing to the fact that the command of that island has been transferred so frequently from one military commander to another between the time that the Confederate Government became responsible for the coast defenses of North Carolina and the attack upon the island upon the 7th of February, 1862. That island, upon the fall of Hatteras, was taken possession of by

Colonel Wright under the instruction from General Huger, and the principal defenses constructed under the authority and directions of General Huger, who assumed jurisdiction over the island, although it was within the military command of General Gatlin. Afterwards Brig. Gen. D. H. Hill was assigned for a short time to the immediate command of that post, who immediately entered upon his duty, made an examination of the defenses in person, and was making active preparations for putting the island in a state of defense when he was suddenly superseded and Brigadier-General Branch given the command. It does not appear in evidence that General Branch ever visited the island or made any move toward its defense. He, however, was superseded by Brigadier-General Wise about the 1st of January, 1862, who immediately proceeded to the island in person about the 6th of January, spent several days in a reconnoissance of the island and its defenses and in examining the adjacent waters with a view of constructing obstructions in Croatan Sound and to prevent the passage of a hostile fleet, and from that moment up to the 7th of February the committee are satisfied that General Wise has devoted his whole time in a zealous, energetic, and indefatigable effort to place that island in a state of defense, and has done all and everything in his power, with the means he had at his command, to effect this important object. At Norfolk, on the 2d of January, upon his way to Roanoke Island, he met an express from Colonel Shaw (who was then in the immediate temporary command of the island) to General Huger, informing him of the defenseless state of the island, and urging the necessity of strengthening Fort Bartow by mounting other guns, obstructing Croatan Sound, and making requisitions for ammunition, pile driver, and other things necessary. General Wise indorsed and approved of the requisition and seconded the demands of Colonel Shaw. General Wise arrived at Roanoke Island upon the 6th and assumed the command at that post upon the 7th of January, 1862. After making a reconnoissance of the island and its defenses, General Wise, on the 13th January, informed General Huger "that Roanoke Island was in a defenseless condition and in presence of a very formidable enemy's force. The Burnside expedition is reported to have sailed. Independent of that, the force now at Hatteras Inlet can pass or take Roanoke Island, and pardon me for saying that I respectfully differ from the opinion you expressed in your orders to-day, that to prevent the enemy's gunboats from passing the marshes at the south end will also prevent any landing. Batteries at the marshes are vitally essential to prevent the gunboats from passing into Croatan Sound, but they will not prevent the landing on the south or east end of the island. At least 3,000 infantry are needed on the island, and a considerable force, say 1,500 men, are needed on the beaches, and if the enemy pass Roanoke, 5,000 at least are necessary to fight them on the tongue of land on the north side of Albemarle Sound. We need on the beach and on the island at least 8 field pieces and the carriages and caissons necessary. We require 32 horses for the artillery. We need at least 6 heavy pieces at the south end marshes and 2 at least at Fleetwood Point."

On the same day General Wise addressed the Secretary of War, in which he says that "it is very important that my legion should be forwarded as speedily as possible. The defense of Roanoke Island (which is the key of all the rear defenses of Norfolk and its canals and railroads) is committed to my charge, and I have just returned from a reconnoissance of that point. It is now utterly defenseless. No preparations have been made there at all adequate. General Huger has given me a large authority to do whatever is necessary, and has advised what he deems proper in my command, but we have very limited means and not half time enough to prepare to meet an enemy, who is now almost in immediate presence in very formidable force. Twice the number of my legion is necessary, and I beg that the place of my Third Regiment may speedily be filled or that it may be restored."

On the 15th January, 1862, General Wise writes to the Secretary of War: "I am sure you will not adjudge me importunate when I inform you that I returned from Roanoke Island to Norfolk last Saturday. I hasten back after a short reconnoissance to apprise headquarters and the Department that there are no defenses there; no adequate preparation whatever to meet the enemy, and to forward all the means in my reach as speedily as possible to make the key of all the rear of Norfolk, with its canals and railroads, safe. Inside of Hatteras Inlet I found 24 vessels of light draft, 8 of which are steamers, said to carry four guns each. They are at farthest but 30 miles from Roanoke Island and can reach there any four hours or less to attack five small gunboats, under Captain Lynch, and four small land batteries, wholly inefficient. Any boat drawing 7 feet water or less can pass the Croatan Sound as far off as $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles from any battery, and the enemy's guns can silence our batteries there in a very short time. Neither battery is casemated, and our men now there are untrained to heavy pieces mounted on navy carriages. The moment the enemy passes Croatan Channel, the North Landing River, North River, Pasquotank, Chowan, Roanoke, Alligator, and Scuppernon rivers, and the Dismal Swamp and Albemarle and Chesapeake canals will be blockaded effectually, and Norfolk and Portsmouth will be cut off from supplies of corn, pork, and forage. The force at Hatteras is independent of the Burnside expedition. No matter where the latter is, the former is amply sufficient to capture or pass Roanoke Island in any twelve hours. Let me say, then, sir, that if we are to wait for powder from Richmond until we are attacked at that island, that attack will be capture, and our defeat will precede our supply of ammunition. The case is too urgent for me to delay speaking this out plainly at once." And in another part of the same letter he says: "We want ammunition and men. In a word, almost every preparation has to be made. Delay is defeat now at Roanoke Island, and with present means Captain Lynch and I combined can't guarantee successful defense for a day. I beg, sir, that you will urge this upon the Navy Department, and believe that I am not superserviceable in this urgency."

General Wise, finding that his written appeals for aid in the defenses of the island to headquarters at Norfolk and to the Department at Richmond were neglected and treated with indifference, repaired in person to Richmond and called upon the Secretary of War and urged in the most importunate manner the absolute necessity of strengthening the defenses upon that island with additional men, armament, and ammunition. The Secretary of War replied verbally to his appeals for reinforcements that he had not the men to spare for his command. General Wise urged upon the Secretary that General Huger had about fifteen thousand men in front of Norfolk, lying idle in camp for eight months, and that a considerable portion of them could be spared for the defense of the rear of Norfolk, and especially as his (General Wise's) district supplied Norfolk and his army with nearly or quite all of his corn, pork, and forage; that reinforcements at Roanoke Island were as absolutely necessary to the defense of Norfolk as forces in its front, and that particular or special posts should not be allowed to monopolize nearly all the men, powder, and supplies. In reply to all his urgent appeals for the means of defense, General Wise, on the 22d January, received the following Military Order No. 17:

"Brig. Gen. Henry A. Wise, Provisional Army, will immediately proceed to Roanoke Island, N. C., and assume command of the Confederate States troops at that place.

"By command of the Secretary of War:

"JOHN WITHERS,
"Assistant Adjutant-General."

It is apparent to the committee, from the correspondence on file of General Wise with the Secretary of War, General Huger, his superior officer, the governor of North Carolina, and others, proves that he was fully alive to the importance of Roanoke Island, and has devoted his whole time and energies and means to the defense of that position, and that he is in no way responsible for the unfortunate disaster which befell our forces upon that island on the 7th and 8th of February.

But the committee can not say the same in reference to the efforts of the Secretary of War, and the commanding officer at Norfolk, General Huger. It is apparent that the island of Roanoke was important for the defense of Norfolk, and that General Huger had under his command at that point upward of 15,000 men, a large supply of armament and ammunition, and could have thrown, in a few hours, a large reinforcement upon Roanoke Island, and that himself and the Secretary of War had timely notice of the entire inadequacy of the defenses, the want of men and munitions of war, and the threatening attitude of the enemy. But General Huger and the Secretary of War paid no practical attention to those urgent appeals of General Wise, sent forward none of his important requisitions, and permitted General Wise and his inconsiderable force to remain to meet at least 15,000 men, well armed and equipped. If the Secretary of War and the commanding general at Norfolk had not the means to reinforce General Wise, why was he not ordered to abandon his position and save his command? But, upon the contrary, he was required to remain and sacrifice his command, with no means in his insulated position to make his escape, in case of defeat.

The committee, from the testimony, are therefore constrained to report that whatever of blame and responsibility is justly attributable to any one for the defeat of our troops at Roanoke Island on the 8th of February, 1862, should attach to Maj. Gen. B. Huger and the late Secretary of War, J. P. Benjamin.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

B. S. GAITHER, Chairman.

On motion, the report, with its accompanying documents, was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Gaither, from the same committee, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That payment be made, by the Clerk of the House, to the clerk of the special committee on the Roanoke Island disaster, out of the contingent fund, to be not more than five dollars per day; and for the witnesses not more than three dollars per day, for attendance, and not more than ten cents per mile for traveling expenses to and from Richmond. Said payments to be made on the certificate of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. Foote moved to amend the same by adding thereto:

That the clerk of the special committee on the Fort Donelson disaster receive the same pay and in the same manner as provided for the clerk to the Roanoke Island committee.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. Miles moved that the House take up for consideration the bill making certain exemptions from militia duty.

On motion of Mr. Conrad, the House resolved itself into secret session; and having spent some time therein, again resolved itself into open session;

After the call was had,

A motion was made and agreed to,

That all proceedings under the call be suspended.

On motion,

The House again resolved itself into secret session.

SECRET SESSION.

The House being in secret session,

Mr. Conrad moved to take up for consideration

A bill to amend an act to encourage the manufacture of saltpeter and of small arms.

The motion prevailed;

When,

Mr. Conrad moved to amend by inserting after the word "and" and before the word "iron" the words "for the production and manufacture of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Conrad moved further to amend by adding at the end of the section the following, to wit:

and to make advances thereon, not exceeding one-third the amount of such contract.

The amendment was agreed [to].

Mr. Foster moved to amend by striking out the whole of the original bill and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

A bill to encourage the manufacture of iron, lead, and copper, and the production of coal.

Whereas owing to the recent disasters that have befallen our arms in Tennessee, thereby entailing the loss of many of our most extensive iron forges and the destruction of important rolling mills, thus greatly reducing our already too limited supply of iron, now so much needed; and

Whereas these ores and coal abound in inexhaustible amounts in many of the cotton-growing districts of the Confederate States; and

Whereas the cotton and tobacco planters in said districts will, from motives of patriotism as well as of profit, largely curtail, and in many instances altogether abandon, the cultivation of cotton and tobacco and plant their lands to grain, thus leaving a great redundancy of valuable labor; and

Whereas such labor can not be so well or so profitably employed for the protection of the public safety in any other manner as in the development and production of said ores and coal:

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do therefore enact, When any individual or company of individuals shall satisfy the President that he or they are in the legal and undisputed possession of one or more beds of iron, or lead, or copper ore, or coal mine, now not in use or being worked, and of their inability to open up and work the same by reason of the want of means to erect the buildings and purchase the machinery necessary to prosecute such work, and shall further satisfy the President of their full and complete ability to successfully carry on any or all of such works when such buildings are erected and such machinery is purchased, then the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to advance the amount necessary to erect such buildings and purchase such machinery.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That when such applicant or applicants, having received such advance, shall have commenced the working and producing of iron, lead, or copper ore, or coal, he or they shall refund to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount advanced him or them under the provisions of this act, in payments to be made in four equal semiannual installments, without interest thereon, which shall be secured by good and unquestioned bonds, satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, in double the amount of the sum advanced; but the Secretary may, should he so elect, receive, in lieu of cash, its equivalent in such ores or coal.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if, within the period of six months after such advance shall have been made, the applicant or applicants shall fail to transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury satisfactory evidence that he or they are bona fide engaged in the erection of such buildings, and in the prosecution of such work, said advance shall become absolutely due, with eight per cent interest per annum, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith, after the expiration of six months aforesaid, take measures to recover the same, with such interest, in accordance with a condition which shall be inserted in said bond agreeably to the provisions of this section.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The bill having been read as follows, viz:

A bill to provide for the safe and expeditious transportation of troops and munitions of war by railroads.

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That to facilitate the efficient, prompt, and uninterrupted transportation of troops and military munitions and supplies, the President shall appoint a military chief of railroad transportation, who shall have the rank of a lieutenant-colonel and receive compensation at the rate of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly, who shall hold his office during the pleasure of the President, and who shall be selected from the railroad officers in the Confederate States, with a special view to his judgment, skill, and experience in the practical details of railroad operations and machinery, and who shall hold no other office nor employment during its continuance.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the said military chief of railroad transportation shall be authorized and required to divide the railroads in the Confederate States into not less than two nor more than four railroad districts, over each of which districts the President shall appoint a district military superintendent, who shall have the rank of a major, with the annual compensation of sixteen hundred dollars per annum, and who shall also be selected from the railroad officers of the Confederate States, with a special view to his judgment, experience, and skill in the operations and machinery of railroads, and who shall hold his office at the pleasure of the President.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That the acting president and superintendent of each railroad shall, ex officio, be the local and special military superintendents of the operations of each such railroad, and shall have the rank, respectively, the president of a major and the superintendent of a captain, but without any pay or pecuniary compensation to either by virtue of such rank.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That the roadmaster and each conductor of passenger trains and other trains conveying troops, of each railroad, shall have the rank, but without any pay as such, of a first lieutenant; and each chief station agent and section master shall have the rank, but without any pay as such, of second lieutenant.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, That in all matters pertaining to their respective official duties as railroad officers and pertaining to railroad operations intrusted to their care each of the officers of railroads herein named shall have complete and exclusive control, and be subject to no interference or control of any military officer of whatever rank, except as hereinafter provided for; and that any military officer, of whatever rank, not engaged in the management of any railroad, who shall interfere with the movement of any train or other operations of such road, shall be deemed guilty of a military offense, and, upon charges preferred by the president of the railroad company, may be tried and punished at the discretion of a court-martial.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, That each such railroad officer shall, as to the operations of his railroad and the protection of its property, be clothed, according to his rank and within the scope of his duties, with military authority over the agents and operatives and watchmen or guards under his authority, and over any other persons who may molest or intrude upon any property belonging to his railroad.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each district railroad superintendent, with the aid and after consultation with the presidents and superintendents of the railroads within his district, to arrange such schedules for the movement of Government trains as will insure, as far as practicable, their uninterrupted, safe, and prompt continuous transportation along their several railroads, without unnecessary delays on or at the termini of either of the railroads in his district, as well as to secure like close connections and uninterrupted transportation with the railroads of districts adjacent to his own. If, upon such consultation with such railroad presidents and superintendents, he shall fail to agree with them upon such schedules for uninterrupted transportation, he shall establish a schedule, to which it shall be obligatory on the officers of such railroads to conform the movements of their trains. If the officers of any such railroad, over which such schedules shall have been established, shall neglect or refuse to conform to such schedules the movement of their trains, then, upon the complaint of the said district military superintendent, and upon due notice of such complaint to the president or superintendent so neglecting or refusing, the chief of military transportation may, after a summary hearing of both parties, if he deem such complaint well founded, call upon the general commanding the department in which such recalcitrant president or superintendent shall reside to take military possession of such railroad and deliver it to such district military superintendent, to be controlled and managed by such officers as such district superintendent may appoint, and so long as the said chief of military transportation may deem necessary to the military operations of the Government.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, That whenever transportation for troops, officers, or military munitions or supplies is desired or required by any military officer, such officer shall give the earliest practicable notice of such requirement to the proper officer of the railroad or railroads over which such transportation is to be performed, who shall himself also give the promptest notice practicable of such requirement to the proper officer of each connecting railroad over which the same transportation is to be continued; and any such military officer making such a requisition shall designate the hour when such officers, troops, or military munitions or supplies will be completely ready for transportation, and it shall be his imperative duty to see that they are then so ready, and, after which hour no train shall be detained without the consent of the controlling officers of such railroad, but the hours of departure and arrival and all other matters relating to the movements of trains shall be controlled exclusively by such officers of the railroads performing the transportation.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, That whenever, upon the representation of any general commanding any department, or in the judgment of any of the said district military superintendents, or of the said chief of military railroad transportation, or by a general commanding a division, when neither of the three above-named officers are present, it shall be deemed necessary, or of great importance to the public service, either to remove the rails or other movable structures, or the machinery of any railroad in any district, in order to prevent their capture by the public enemy, or to repair, extend, or alter the roadway, structures, or machinery of such railroad, or to construct any side tracks, water stations, warehouses, or other structures connected with any such railroad, such work shall be, upon the requisition of such district superintendents, promptly executed under the control and superintendence, if practicable, of the officers of such railroad, and, if they can not or will not execute it as promptly or as well as may be practicable by such district superintendent, the cost thereof in either case to be defrayed by the Treasurer of the Confederate States, on the warrant of such district superintendent, and to be charged to and refunded by the company on whose railroad such structures are constructed, or such repairs, extensions, or alterations of roadway, structures, or machinery are made, to the extent only, however, and at the time when they shall be of value and importance to such company, irrespective of their exclusive value to the Government; such value to be determined by the estimate of three impartial arbitrators, one of whom shall be selected by such company, another by the Government, and by those two the third shall be chosen.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, That if any superintendent or president of any railroad company shall willfully fail or refuse, upon a requisition made in the manner hereinbefore indicated, to furnish transportation for troops and munitions of war to the extent required, and to the extent of the capacity of the road, the officer or officers so offending shall be deemed guilty of a military offense, and for such offense shall be tried and punished at the discretion of a court-martial—a portion of the punishment inflicted by which, should the party tried be found guilty, shall be removal from official connection with the road.

SEC. 11. Be it further enacted, That any officer or employee connected with any railroad upon whom by this act it is provided military rank shall be conferred, if he fails willfully in any manner to perform his duty, as such officer or employee, whereby detention or detriment may occur in the transportation of troops or munitions of war, shall be deemed guilty of a military offense, and punished at the discretion of a court-martial, a portion of the punishment inflicted by which, should the party tried be found guilty, shall be removal from office or employment in connection with the road: Provided, That the court-martial, to be ordered under this and the preceding section, shall be composed alike of officers upon whom by this act rank is conferred and of officers of the Army.

Sec. 12. Be it further enacted, That the military chief of railroad transportation and the district superintendents shall each be entitled to one clerk, to whom shall be paid a salary of eight hundred dollars, except the clerk of the military chief, whose salary shall be one thousand two hundred dollars,

Mr. Miles moved to amend the same by striking out the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three;" also to strike out the words "and who shall hold no other office or employment during its continuance."

Sec. 2. A copy of said schedule and rules and regulations shall be furnished to the president of each railroad company, whose duty it shall be to cause the same to be faithfully observed and complied with, with the exception hereafter provided for.

Sec. 3. Whenever it shall be necessary to transport troops with such haste that the regulations which have been prescribed for running the trains can not be complied with, any general officer commanding such troops shall have authority to take the control of any road and all its rolling stock and agents, and to issue such orders to its agents as may be necessary to effect the transportation of such troops, their baggage and stores, promptly and safely, which orders shall be faithfully and promptly obeyed by all the officers, agents, and employees of such railroad companies. If in such transportation a collision between two trains shall occur, either because the commanding officer has not given such orders as were necessary to prevent it or because those orders were not properly obeyed and executed, the offender shall be deemed guilty of a military offense and punished according to the extent of the injury caused by the collision as a court-martial may determine, before which it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause such offender to be carried without delay for trial.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to appoint a suitable person, who is not liable to active military duty, to act as inspector of the railroads, who shall, under the order of the Secretary of War, inspect all the railroads in the Confederate States, their rolling stock, workshops, and tracks, and report thereon from time to time to the said Secretary, noting and reporting especially all delinquencies, imperfections, and deficiencies in the roads, stock, and shops, and the manner of using the said roads and transporting troops.

and to insert in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That from and after the passage of this act no one shall export from any of the ports of the Confederate States any cotton, tobacco, rice, rosin, turpentine, naval stores, or timber, unless such person shall first obtain from the President permission in writing to make such shipment to foreign ports, other than the United States; and shall also take an oath before any judge or justice of a court of record, to be filed with the clerk thereof, that it is bona fide the intention of the affiant to make such shipment to some foreign port, other than the United States, and to procure in return therefor arms, munitions of war, iron, ironclad steamers, shoes, blankets, medicines, or other articles needed by the Government for the prosecution of the war, or for the comfort or the efficiency of the Army of the Confederate States; and such return cargoes shall come into the ports of the Confederate States free of duty.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That if it shall appear afterwards that any one who has taken the above-described oath has made such shipment to any port of the United States, or sold the same in any other port to any citizen of the United States, or agent of such citizen, or that such vessel has been absent for the period of nine months, or has returned in safety to any port of the Confederate States, without bringing in a cargo of any of the articles mentioned in the first section of this act, such acts, or either of them, shall be deemed prima facie evidence of the guilt of the shipper of such exports, and the onus of proof shall then be on him to shew his innocence.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That whenever the President may deem it advisable that any of said articles of export should be shipped to foreign ports, other than the United States, for any other purpose than those enumerated herein, either to raise funds, purchase war steamers, or any articles necessary to the prosecution of the existing war, he may authorize such shipment under such regulations as he may establish to accomplish the objects above specified, and no other objects whatever.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act shall not operate to prohibit any citizen or subject of any foreign country, other than the United States, from importing from such foreign country, other than the United States, the articles enumerated in the first section of this act, free of duty, and receiving in exchange therefor, or the proceeds thereof, after delivery of said imports into any port of the Confederate States, any of said articles of export and shipping the same to any foreign port, other than the United States.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, That any person, his aiders or abettors, who shall violate the provisions of this act shall forfeit such articles of export, and be fined a sum not less than one nor more than five thousand dollars, and imprisoned for a period not less than five years. And any one who shall inform against such guilty person shall be entitled to receive, upon conviction of such guilty person, one-fourth of the articles forfeited as aforesaid, and the same amount out of the said fine, when collected. And it shall be the duty of all district attorneys of the Confederate States to institute prosecutions against such guilty person or persons, their aiders or abettors, by indictment or otherwise, and the judges of the several district courts shall give this act in charge to the grand juries thereof.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, That whenever the President shall, by proclamation or otherwise, make it known that the Confederate States are sufficiently supplied with arms, munitions of war, iron, medicines, and other articles necessary for the comfort or the efficiency of the Army of the Confederate States, or necessary to the prosecution of the existing war, then other articles of trade may be imported, free of duty, into the Confederate States, and exchanged for said articles of export, and shipped upon the conditions and under the regulations specified in this act.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force during the existence of the present blockade, and no longer.

Mr. Gray moved to amend the amendment by adding at the end of the first section of the same the following, to wit:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to the exportation of cotton or tobacco by loyal citizens overland to Mexico, a coterminous neutral country,

And upon which he demanded the previous question;

 A bill to punish drunkenness in the Army.

The Chair presented a message from the President; which is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

I deem it my duty to call your attention to some practical difficulties which will occur in the execution of the law just passed for the conscription of all persons subject to military duty between the ages of 18 and 35 years, and to point out some omissions that it seems wise to supply.

1. There are a number of troops in the service of the several States for which no provision is made. They have been organized for State defense, which is necessarily the public defense, but are not a part of the armies of the Confederacy. It would not be politic to break up these organizations for the purpose of taking out of them such of the men as are subject to conscription for distribution among other troops. I suggest that power be granted to the Executive to accept a transfer of such regiments, battalions, squadrons, or companies now in the service of the respective States as may be tendered by the States, according to any organization consistent with the Confederate laws.

2. In the tenth section of the bill there is a seeming conflict between two clauses, one of which requires that in all cases elections shall be held to fill the lowest grade, while another gives power to promote from the ranks, to any vacant office, a private who may have distinguished himself conspicuously. I would be glad to have the intent of Congress on this point stated in an amendment to the bill.

3. Under the fourth section of the act of 11th December, 1861, it was declared that all troops revolunteering or reenlisting shall, at the expiration of their present term of service, have the power to reorganize themselves into companies, and to elect their company officers; and that said companies should have the right to reorganize themselves into battalions or regiments, and elect their field officers, etc.

By the second section of the act just passed, 16th April, 1862, it is prohibited to include in the organization of such new companies and regiments as may be completed within thirty days "any persons now in service."

It is submitted whether bare justice to the men who first entered the military service, and who have again voluntarily enrolled themselves to serve for the war, does not require that Government should carry out the understanding under which they reenlisted, by permitting them to serve in organizations more acceptable to them than those in which they are now embraced.

I should regret to see men now for the first time brought into service under the stringency of the law vested with a right of choosing their association, while the same privilege is denied to those who have distinguished themselves by the alacrity with which they have volunteered.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Chair presented a message from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, April 18, 1862.

Mr. Gartrell moved to lay bill and amendment on the table; which was agreed to.

On motion, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the resolution rescinding the resolution of adjournment, and the resolution punishing drunkenness in the Army.

And on motion of Mr. Miles,

The House resolved itself into open session.

FIFTY-THIRD DAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Jeter.

The Chair laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the estimates of the Navy Department; which was read and, on motion, laid on the table.

Mr. Foster presented the protest of himself and Mr. Wright of Georgia against the passage of an act entitled "An act to provide for the safe and expeditious transportation of troops and munitions of war by railroad;" which was read, ordered to be spread upon the Journal, and is as follows, to wit:

We, the undersigned, members of the first session of the First Permanent Congress, beg leave most respectfully to enter this our most solemn protest against the passage of an act entitled "An act to provide for the safe and expeditious transportation of troops and munitions of war by railroad," and, in justification of the same, to lay before the House and the country the following as our reasons:

First. We believe there is no power granted by the Constitution, either expressed or implied, that authorizes or justifies Congress in appropriating or seizing the property of States or persons, and placing the same, either for temporary or permanent purposes, in the hands of the Executive, or in any wise disposing of the same without the consent of the owners thereof. On the contrary, we believe that the Constitution expressly prohibits and denies such power:

Article I, section 9, expressly declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated."

Second. We believe that this act, should it become a law, would be subversive of, and in direct contravention to, the great and fundamental principles of State sovereignty, the right to regulate their own domestic institutions being one of those inalienable and sacred rights reserved by the States composing our Confederacy, and the destruction of which would inevitably tend to the speedy destruction of our liberties.

Third. We believe the act to be altogether inexpedient and uncalled for, and that the several railroads in the Confederate States, all of which have been prompt and willing to aid the Government to the very utmost of their capacity, and at reduced charges, have been and will continue to be far better managed by their respective presidents and directories, chosen by the stockholders, who are more conversant with all the minute and complicated details of their roads and the proper and economical management of their means of transportation than the Executive or his military subordinates could possibly be.

For these and other equally cogent reasons, which must occur to every intelligent mind not unreasonably depressed by exigencies and vicissitudes through which Providence has decreed that we shall pass in our progress to national independence, and which we hope and believe are but the precursors of victory and success, we protest against said act, and respectfully request that this, our protest, be entered upon the Journal.

AUGUSTUS R. WRIGHT.
THOMAS J. FOSTER.

Mr. McDowell presented the memorial of J. P. Levy, of North Carolina, praying for the sequestration of the property of an alien enemy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, without being read.

Mr. Perkins offered

A resolution that the President be requested to furnish to the House of Representatives, in secret session, information as to the amount of funds which has been sent abroad to officers or agents of the Government for military or naval purposes, indicating the department through which each amount has been sent, the date and amount of each sum of money sent, and to whom and for what purpose sent, and whether said sums sent in coin, sterling bills, or produce, and the date and amount of each kind so transferred, and if in exchange or produce, the prices paid for such exchange or produce, and whether said produce was paid for in bonds or notes, and in what proportion of each; and furthermore, what amount of funds so sent has been expended and what for; which was read and agreed to.

Mr. Gaither offered

Also, the following report, to wit:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

The Joint Committee on Flag and Seal submit to the judgment of Congress the accompanying design of a flag of the Confederate States of America.

The considerations which influenced the committee in selecting the proposed design were—

First. Its want of resemblance to the flag of any other nation.

Second. The distinctness of its colors, rendering it discernible at a distance.

Third. Its simplicity and consequent facility of fabrication for an emergency.

Fourth. Its conformity to the proprieties of heraldry.

Fifth. Its symbolization of the characteristics of a free and prosperous people.

Ancient heralds, in their quaint language, would describe this flag as on a field gules saltiere argent with a shield azure, charged with a sun in his glory, or,

The red field denotes martial prowess, boldness, courage, valor;

The saltiere an honorable ordinary in heraldry, emblem of progress and strength, its white indicating purity, innocence, and gentleness;

The blue of the shield represents justice, faith, perseverance, and vigilance;

The sun manifests the dominion, generosity, and stability of the Confederacy.

Nearly all the designs submitted to the committee contained a combination of stars. This heraldic emblem, however, has been discarded as a manifestation of our entire and absolute severance from the "United States" and the complete annihilation of every sentiment indicating the faintest hope of reconstruction.

Respectfully submitted.

THOS. J. SEMMES,

Chairman on the part of the Senate.

ALEX. R. BOTELER,

Chairman on the part of the House.

I recommend that an appropriation be made of the sum, and for the purposes specified.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Richmond, Va., April 19, 1862.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herein, to be transmitted to Congress, an estimate of an appropriation required to carry into effect "An act to authorize the exchange of bonds for articles in kind, and the shipment, sale, or hypothecation of such articles."

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. G. MEMMINGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

To the PRESIDENT.

Estimate of an appropriation required to carry into effect "An act to authorize the exchange of bonds for articles in kind, and the shipment, sale, or hypothecation of such articles."

For this amount, to cover the probable expenses of carrying into effect said act..... $2,000,000

RO. TYLER, Register.

Richmond, Va., April 19, 1862.

Mr. Kenner, from the Committee on Ways and Means, by consent of the House, introduced

A bill making appropriations to carry into effect an act authorizing the exchange of bonds for articles in kind, and shipment, sale, or hypothecation of such articles; which was read the first and second times, and the rules being suspended, was engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

The Chair laid before the House a communication from the President; which was read and laid on the table, and is as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

I deem it proper to inform you that a number of acts passed by the Congress were presented to me at a very late hour on Saturday night. I have examined them as carefully as the limited time at my disposal has permitted, and have returned nearly all of them with my approval. There are, however, three of them to which I have objections which it is impossible to communicate to you in writing within the few remaining hours of the session, and which will, therefore, fail to become laws. Happily, the acts in question are not of great public importance. Recognizing, as

I do, the right of Congress to receive the fullest information from the Executive on all matters of legislation on which his concurrence is required by the Constitution, I have considered it more respectful to the Congress to make this statement of the cause which has prevented my action on these bills, than to retain them without assigning my reason for so doing.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. Ralls, from the special committee appointed to visit the hospitals, made the following report; which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed:

The committee appointed under a resolution of this House, authorizing an examination into the Medical Department of the Army, to inquire into the practical workings of the system, and to point out abuses, if any are found to exist, etc., beg leave to present the following report:

The resolution is very comprehensive in its character, as it appears to open up the whole field connected with our military operations. Confined, however, as the committee have been, by the discharge of their regular duties as members of this body, they have only been enabled to make a personal examination of the hospitals in this city and its suburbs, and have been compelled to rely on other sources for information as to the workings of the system in the field.

We find that at this time there are some twenty hospitals in the city where sick and wounded soldiers are treated, and capable of accommodating some five or six thousand patients. They are partly under Government and State control, while others are under exclusive Government control. Those of them that are under State auspices receive rations or commutation therefor from the Government; the nurse hire is also paid and the medicines furnished. There is a scarcity of medicines to a considerable extent, and those having charge of State hospitals occasionally make purchases in addition to what is furnished them. The State hospitals are superior to those of the Government in two respects. We found the bedding more clean, and a greater amount of what might be called delicacies for the sick, as from the liberal State and private contributions a larger fund has been furnished with which to make purchases. In all the hospitals there was found to be sufficient cleanliness in the floors and walls and in the culinary department; or we might use stronger language and say that in all these respects they are worthy of commendation. The same remark will apply to the food furnished, it being good in quality and well prepared. In all, too, so far as we could judge, the sick are kindly treated, and do not suffer for want of attention. The chief ground of complaint in the Government hospitals, with the exceptions presently to be named, was the want of cleanliness in the bedding; the sheets in many instances evidently being used too long without being changed.

While the Bird's Island Hospital, in common with other Government hospitals, is obnoxious to this criticism, we also found the vessels used in its wards, such as spittoons, etc., to receive too little attention, and to be somewhat offensive. The Government hospitals that, in the particulars on which we are commenting, received the approval of the committee, are the General, the Banner, and Royster's Factory. The latter we mention particularly as being a model of neatness, and as reflecting great credit on those who have it in charge. We mention this with the greater pleasure, as it affords convincing proof that the present regulations, if properly enforced, are amply sufficient to afford our sick and wounded soldiers all the "aid and comfort" they could reasonably expect to find short of home. The attention of the committee was specially called to two very important subjects, to wit: discharges and furloughs. The present system of procuring discharges is, in the unanimous opinion of the committee, very objectionable. The plan now adopted is as follows: The surgeon makes application to the Surgeon-General; if the Surgeon-General approves of the application he makes his indorsement, and it is then forwarded to the captain under whom the sick man serves. He is expected also to approve, as well as the colonel and the general commanding. In which case an order for the discharge of the applicant is issued and addressed to the hospital surgeon. Thus it will be seen the whole process is tedious, in the opinion of the committee wholly unnecessary, and wholly inefficient. Indeed, if the intention had been to keep disabled soldiers as long as possible in the wards of a hospital, breathing the impure air of such places, then the present system is one that is entitled to preference over all others, as it most effectually accomplishes that object. We call special attention to the following objections to this system, as above detailed. In the first place we would remark that the army officers are incapable of judging of the propriety or impropriety of the discharges, because of the fact that they have not seen the patient for weeks, it may be for months, and can not, therefore, in the very nature of the case, have any personal knowledge of the condition of such patient. Again, the delay which must, of necessity, result, as the experience of the last six months proves. The Army is frequently moving, so that the application often fails to reach the military officer; or the officer may himself be sick, so as to be unable to attend to the matter; or, his attention being taken up with other matters that he may perchance consider of pressing importance, the papers are laid aside for the time being, or perhaps are entirely forgotten and never acted on at all, or until the attention of the officer is again called to the matter by the intervention of some friend of the sick man. At any rate, your committee have seen patients in the hospitals of the city utterly broken down in health, and who, notwithstanding the recommendation of both the surgeon and the Surgeon-General, have waited in vain for months for a release from their present uncomfortable position. Both the interests of the service and the consideration of humanity imperatively demand that some more effectual mode of procuring discharges should be adopted.

It is now, too, exceedingly difficult to procure a furlough, while the committee are satisfied that cogent reasons may be given for the adoption of a more liberal policy in this matter. There are many convalescents who will still be in the hospitals weeks before being able to do duty. These patients would recover much more rapidly if on furlough, breathing the purer air and receiving the kinder attentions of home. The beds thus vacated could be appropriated to other patients, thus greatly increasing the capacity of the hospitals to accommodate a greater number of patients in a given time. One other fact is worthy of attention. It is now universally conceded that typhoid fever is, to a certain extent, a contagious affection. Now it often happens that convalescents from other diseases, as they linger for some time about the hospitals before being able to return to service, contract this serious malady, and in too many instances succumb under it. The testimony of the surgeons is uniform on this point. It is, then, in the opinion of the committee, much to be desired that relief should, in this respect, be extended to our sick and suffering soldiers.

The committee would also call attention to one or two matters connected with the medical department in the field.

We think that the present arrangement allowing only one surgeon and one assistant surgeon is not sufficient to meet the wants of the service. The committee forbear, however, to enlarge on this point, but will only state that the Surgeon-General concurs in this opinion, and recommends that an additional assistant surgeon should be appointed for every regiment.

On inquiry, we find that the transportation for medical stores is insufficient. The wagons that were furnished for this purpose to the Army of the Potomac have been used to a great extent for hauling wood and other articles, and the result has been that the wagons have been broken, and now there is scarcely any transportation of the kind, and a large amount of medicines, bandages, etc., have been, at various times, abandoned or destroyed. As a remedy, we would suggest that the use of such wagons should be limited absolutely to the transportation of medical stores.

The committee have thus given a fair and impartial statement of facts, and have made such suggestions as, in our opinion, would promote the public weal and add to the comfort and efficiency of those brave and patriotic men on whom the country relies in this hour of trial.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

J. P. RALLS,
Chairman Committee.

A communication was received from the President, by his Private Secretary, Mr. Harrison; which is as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

It is again our fortune to meet for devising measures necessary to the public welfare, whilst our country is involved in a desolating war. The sufferings endured by some portions of the people excite the deep solicitude of the Government, and the sympathy thus evoked has been heightened by the patriotic devotion with which these sufferings have been borne.

The gallantry and good conduct of our troops, always claiming the gratitude of the country, have been further illustrated on hard-fought fields, marked by exhibitions of individual prowess which can find but few parallels in ancient or modern history. Our Army has not faltered in any of the various trials to which it has been subjected; and the great body of the people has continued to manifest a zeal and unanimity which not only cheer the battle-stained soldier, but give assurance to the friends of constitutional liberty of our final triumph in the pending struggle against despotic usurpation.

The vast army which threatened the capital of the Confederacy has been defeated and driven from the lines of investment, and the enemy, repeatedly foiled in his efforts for its capture, is now seeking to raise new armies on a scale such as modern history does not record, to effect that subjugation of the South so often proclaimed as on the eve of accomplishment.

The perfidy which disregarded rights secured by compact, the madness which trampled on obligations made sacred by every consideration of honor, have been intensified by the malignancy engendered by defeat. These passions have changed the character of the hostilities waged by our enemies, who are becoming daily less regardful of the usages of civilized war and the dictates of humanity. Rapine and wanton destruction of private property, war upon noncombatants, murder of captives, bloody threats to avenge the death of an invading soldiery by the slaughter of unarmed citizens, orders of banishment against peaceful farmers engaged in the cultivation of the soil, are some of the means used by our ruthless invaders to enforce the submission of a free people to foreign sway. Confiscation bills, of a character so atrocious as to insure, if executed, the utter ruin of the entire population of these States, are passed by their Congress and approved by their Executive. The moneyed obligations of the Confederate Government are forged by citizens of the United States, and publicly advertised for sale in their cities, with a notoriety which sufficiently attests the knowledge of their Government; and its complicity in the crime is further evinced by the fact that the soldiers of the invading armies are found supplied with large quantities of these forged notes, as a means of despoiling the country people by fraud out of such portions of their property as armed violence may fail to reach. Two, at least, of the generals of the United States are engaged, unchecked by their Government, in exciting servile insurrection and in arming and training slaves for warfare against their masters, citizens of the Confederacy. Another has been found of instincts so brutal as to invite the violence of his soldiery against the women of a captured city. Yet the rebuke of civilized man has failed to evoke from the authorities of the United States one mark of disapprobation of his acts; nor is there any reason to suppose that the conduct of Benjamin F. Butler has failed to secure from his Government the sanction and applause with which it is known to have been greeted by public meetings and portions of the press of the United States. To inquiries made of the Commander in Chief of the armies of the United States whether the atrocious conduct of some of their military commanders met the sanction of that Government, answer has been evaded on the pretext that the inquiry was insulting; and no method remains for the repression of these enormities but such retributive justice as it may be found possible to execute. Retaliation for many of them in kind is impracticable, for I have had occasion to remark in a former message, that under no excess of provocation could our noble-hearted defenders be driven to wreak vengeance on unarmed men, on women, or on children. But stern and exemplary punishment can and must be meted out to the murderers and felons, who, disgracing the profession of arms, seek to make of public war the occasion for the commission of the most monstrous crime. Deeply as we may regret the character of the contest into which we are about to be forced, we must accept it as an alternative which recent manifestations give us little hope can be avoided.

The exasperation of failure has aroused the worst passions of our enemies; a large portion of their people, even of their clergymen, now engage in urging an excited populace to the extreme of ferocity; and nothing remains but to vindicate our rights and to maintain our existence by employing against our foe every energy and every resource at our disposal.

I append, for your information, a copy of the papers exhibiting the action of the Government up to the present time for the repression of the outrages committed on our people. Other measures now in progress will be submitted hereafter.

In inviting your attention to the legislation which the necessities of our condition require, those connected with the prosecution of the war command almost undivided attention.

The acts passed at your last session intended to secure the public defense by general enrollment, and to render uniform the rules governing troops in the service, have led to some unexpected criticism that is much to be regretted.

The efficiency of the law has been thus somewhat impaired; though it is not believed that in any of the States the popular mind has withheld its sanction from either the necessity or propriety of your legislation.

It is only by harmonious as well as zealous action that a government as new as ours, ushered into existence on the very eve of a great war, and unprovided with the material for conducting hostilities on so vast a scale, can fulfill its duties. Upon you, who are fully informed of the acts and purposes of the Government, and thoroughly imbued with the feelings and sentiments of the people, must reliance be placed to secure this great object. You can best devise the means for establishing that entire cooperation of the State and Confederate Governments which is essential to the well-being of both at all times, but which is now indispensable to their very existence. And if any legislation shall seem to you appropriate for adjusting differences of opinion, it will be my pleasure, as well as duty, to cooperate in any measure that may be devised for reconciling a just care for the public defense with a proper deference for the most scrupulous susceptibilities of the State authorities.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury will exhibit in detail the operations of that Department. It will be seen with satisfaction that the credit of the Government securities remains unimpaired, and that this credit is fully justified by the comparatively small amount of accumulated debt, notwithstanding the magnitude of our military operations. The legislation of the last session provided for the purchase of supplies with the bonds of the Government; but the preference of the people for Treasury notes has been so marked that legislation is recommended to authorize an increase in the issue of Treasury notes which the public service seems to require. No grave inconvenience need be apprehended from this increased issue, as the provision of law by which these notes are convertible into 8 per cent bonds forms an efficient and permanent safeguard against any serious depreciation of the currency.

Your attention is also invited to the means proposed by the Secretary for facilitating the preparation of these notes, and for guarding them against forgery. It is due to our people to state that no manufacture of counterfeit notes exists within our limits, and that they are all imported from the Northern States.

The report of the Secretary of War, which is submitted, contains numerous suggestions for the legislation deemed desirable in order to add to the efficiency of the service. I invite your favorable consideration especially to those recommendations which are intended to secure the proper execution of the conscript law, and the consolidation of companies, battalions, and regiments when so reduced in strength as to impair that uniformity of organization which is necessary in the Army, while an undue burthen is imposed on the Treasury. The necessity for some legislation for controlling military transportation on the railroads, and improving their present defective condition, forces itself upon the attention of the Government; and I trust you will be able to devise satisfactory measures for attaining this purpose.

The legislation on the subject of general officers involves the service in some difficulties, which are pointed out by the Secretary, and for which the remedy suggested by him seems appropriate.

In connection with this subject, I am of opinion that prudence dictates some provision for the increase of the Army in the event of emergencies not now anticipated. The very large increase of forces recently called into the field by the President of the United States may render it necessary hereafter to extend the provisions of the conscript law so as to embrace persons between the ages of 35 and 45 years. The vigor and efficiency of our present forces, their condition, and the skill and ability which distinguish their leaders, inspire the belief that no further enrollment will be necessary. But a wise foresight requires that if a necessity should be suddenly developed during the recess of Congress, requiring increased forces for our defense, means should exist for calling such forces into the field, without awaiting the reassembling of the legislative department of the Government.

In the election and appointment of officers for the Provisional Army, it was to be anticipated that mistakes would be made, and incompetent officers of all grades introduced into the service. In the absence of experience, and with no reliable guide for selection, executive appointments, as well as elections, have been sometimes unfortunate. The good of the service, the interests of our country, require that some means be devised for withdrawing the commissions of officers who are incompetent for the duties required by their position; and I trust you will find means for relieving the Army of such officers by some mode more prompt and less wounding to their sensibility than the judgment of a court-martial.

Within a recent period we have effected the object so long desired of an arrangement for the exchange of prisoners; which is now being executed by delivery at the points agreed upon, and which will, it is hoped, speedily restore our brave and unfortunate countrymen to their places in the ranks of the Army from which, by the fortune of war, they have for a time been separated. The details of this arrangement will be communicated to you in a special report when further progress has been made in their execution.

Of other particulars concerning the operations of the War Department you will be informed by the Secretary in his report and the accompanying documents.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy embraces a statement of the operations and present condition of this branch of the public service, both afloat and ashore; the construction and equipment of armed vessels, both at home and abroad; the manufacture of ordnance and ordnance stores, and the establishment of workshops, and the development of our resources of coal and iron. Some legislation seems essential for securing crews for vessels. The difficulties now experienced on this point are fully stated in the Secretary's report, and I invite your attention to providing a remedy.

The report of the Postmaster-General discloses the embarrassments which resulted in the postal service from the occupation by the enemy of the Mississippi River and portions of the territory of the different States. The measures taken by the Department for relieving these embarrassments, as far as practicable, are detailed in the report. It is a subject of congratulation that during the ten months which ended on the 31st March last the expenses of the Department were largely decreased, whilst its revenue was augmented, as compared with a corresponding period ending on the 30th June, 1860, when the postal service of these States was conducted under the authority delegated to the United States.

Sufficient time has not yet elapsed to determine whether the measures heretofore devised by Congress will accomplish the end of bringing the expenditures of the Department within the limits of its own revenues by the 1st of March next, as required by the Constitution.

I am happy to inform you that in spite of both blandishments and threats, used in profusion by the agents of the Government of the United States, the Indian nations within the Confederacy have remained firm in their loyalty and steadfast in the observance of their treaty engagements with this Government. Nor has their fidelity been shaken by the fact that, owing to the vacancies in some of the offices of agents and superintendents, delay has occurred in the payments of the annuities and allowances to which they are entitled. I would advise some provision authorizing payments to be made by other officers in the absence of those specially charged by law with this duty.

We have never-ceasing cause to be grateful for the favor with which God has protected our infant Confederacy. And it becomes us reverently to return our thanks, and humbly to ask of his bounteousness that wisdom which is needful for the performance of the high trusts with which we are charged.

Mr. Foote, by the consent of the House, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution in relation to our commissioners abroad and foreign consuls, made the following report, to wit:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Hartridge, directing them to inquire into the propriety of requesting the President of the Confederate States to recall the commissioners sent by this Government to certain European States, and to notify all foreign powers whose consuls reside in the Confederate States and are accredited to the Government of the United States, that such persons will not be recognized by the Government of the Confederate States as exercising any of the powers or having any of the functions of consuls within the limits of the Confederate States unless appointed by their respective governments as consuls to the Confederate States of America, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report that they appreciate the importance of the proposition submitted to them, but are without that information of our present relations with foreign nations, and the number and character of our agents abroad and of those foreign agents residing in our midst, necessary to enable the committee to act intelligently on the subject, and therefore ask the House to adopt the following resolution of inquiry:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House the number and names of all persons engaged in the service of the Confederate States in foreign countries, either as diplomatic, consular, or commercial agents, or in any other capacity, stating the places to which they have been sent, the date of their appointments, the salaries they receive, the duties they are expected to discharge, and how far they have been officially or otherwise recognized by any foreign government. Also the number and character of foreign agents, whether consular, commercial, or other, known to our Government, representing in any capacity foreign governments within the limits of the Confederate States, and whether communicating with this Government, they do so under an exequatur from our own Government or that of the United States, and whether they are subordinate or subject to the control and direction, in any way and to what degree, of the ministers of their respective countries accredited to and residing in the United States.

The President is further respectfully requested to communicate such instructions as may have been given to our foreign agents and such correspondence as may have been had with other governments, either through the Secretary of State or our commissioners abroad, as will aid Congress in its legislation regarding foreign nations, and their citizens residing in our midst.

The report was agreed to, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Foote also, from the same committee, to whom was referred sundry resolutions in relation to the policy of the war, reported as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred certain resolutions relating to the true policy of the war, and recommending to the President the issuance of a proclamation touching the free navigation of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the opening of the market of the South to the inhabitants of the Northwestern States, upon certain terms and conditions, have had the same under consideration, and now report back said resolutions, with one or two slight amendments, and recommend that they be adopted. The expediency of conducting the war in which we are engaged with all possible activity, and of carrying that war into the enemy's country, so soon as the same shall be found practicable, is believed to be now universally admitted by all enlightened men who have given their attention to the subject. It is evident that we must rely alone upon our own energies for success in the struggle of arms which is now in progress. In the present condition of affairs it is quite manifest that in order to bring the sanguinary struggle in which we are engaged to an early termination it will be necessary that every portion of our Army should be kept in a state of constant readiness for active exertion, and that no opportunity should be neglected of striking the forces of the enemy, wherever to be found upon Southern soil, with that boldness and heroic energy which are so certain to secure to our arms the most signal success. It is equally manifest that the enemy will never be willing to desist from the unjust and ferocious war which they are now waging until the evils and inconveniences thereof shall have been brought home fully to themselves. When our valiant and disciplined armies (enhanced in numbers and in strength, as it is hoped they will shortly be) shall have once found their way to the heart of the enemy's country, and have inflicted a just retaliation upon those who have so ruthlessly ravaged our territories, pillaged our towns, and desolated our homes, it is to be reasonably expected that even they will at last be able to discern the rank injustice and brutal cruelty which they have compelled us to experience, and for the perpetration of which they have not been heretofore subjected to anything like adequate punishment.

Your committee are well satisfied that the issuing of some such proclamation by the President, as that described in the resolutions referred to them, at such time as he shall deem expedient, could not but be attended with the most salutary effects. It is an undoubted fact that the Government at Washington, aided by unscrupulous local demagogues in the Northwestern States, has succeeded to a considerable extent in deluding the people of that region into a general belief that, should we succeed in our struggle for independence, it is the intention of the Government and people of the Confederate States to shut them out from the free navigation of the Mississippi River and its great tributaries; and though the Provisional Congress of these States long ago emphatically negatived this idea by well-known acts of formal legislation, yet your committee is assured that the delusion on this subject still continues to exist among the people of the Northwest, and that the gross misapprehension in regard to the intentions and policy of the Confederate States of America, thus engendered and kept in existence by wicked and designing men, has operated most effectively in prompting the people of the Northwestern States (so closely connected with the South heretofore, both by geographical and political ties) to contribute freely both in men and money to the prosecution of a war which, if successful on the part of those with whom it has originated, would be eventually as disastrous in its effects to the people of the Northwestern States themselves as to those of the Confederate States of America. It is gratifying to discover that high-spirited and intelligent public men in several of the Northwestern States have of late become exceedingly active in their endeavors to discourage and suppress the ferocious war spirit heretofore raging among their fellow-citizens, and that their honest and patriotic efforts have been already attended with the most marked success. Such a proclamation as that recommended in the resolutions referred to this committee, it is confidently believed, would have a tendency greatly to strengthen the efforts of the advocates of peace in the Northwestern States, be calculated to bring those States quickly into amicable relations with the States of the South, withdraw them ultimately altogether from their present injurious political connection with the States of the North and East, with which they have really so little in common, and thus enable us to dictate the terms of a just and honorable peace from the great commercial emporiums of that region through whose influence mainly has this wicked and unnatural war been thus far kept in progress.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

H. S. FOOTE, Chairman.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the true policy of the present war imperatively requires that the movements of our armies in the field should everywhere be as active and aggressive as would be at all consistent with a sound and enlightened discretion, striking at the forces of the enemy boldly and vigorously wherever they may be found on Southern soil, and delaying nowhere long enough to allow to our merciless foes an opportunity of devastating the most fertile districts of the South, and perchance of ultimately obtaining reinforcements which may make it difficult to drive them beyond our confines without such an expenditure of the precious blood of our patriot soldiery as would not be now necessary for their expulsion or capture."

Amended, as proposed, the second and third resolutions will read as follows, viz:

Resolved, That should the deluded Government at Washington still obstinately continue to refuse us peace, it is the evident policy of the Confederate Government to invade the country of the enemy, with a view to obtaining complete 'indemnity for the past and security for the future.'

Resolved, That the President be requested, if consistent with his own views of propriety, at such time as he shall deem most appropriate, to address a formal proclamation to the inhabitants of the Northwestern States, embodying the acts of the Provisional Congress relating to this subject, proposing to guarantee to the citizens of all said States resident upon the border of said (the Mississippi) river and its tributaries, as shall not be at war at the time with the Confederate States, in the most effectual and satisfactory mode, the peaceful navigation of the said river and its tributaries; and it is further requested of the President that he will also make known, in said proclamation, the willingness of the Government and people of the Confederate States to enter hereafter into a reciprocity commercial treaty or treaties with any one or more of them."

If any member be absent any other member may draw for him.

Mr. Curry moved to amend the resolution of Mr. Lyons by striking out the whole of the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

Resolved, That the names of all the members of this House be placed in a hat, and that one of the pages be directed to draw them out, one by one, and that as the name of each member is drawn, such member shall proceed to select such unoccupied seat in the new hall as he may prefer, and thereupon his name shall be marked and he shall continue to occupy said seat during the remainder of the drawing [session?]: Provided, That the drawing shall not take place until the House proceed to the new hall.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

I have the gratification of presenting to Congress two dispatches from Gen. Robert E. Lee, commanding the Army of Northern Virginia, communicating the results of the operations north of the Rappahannock. From these dispatches it will be seen that God has again extended his shield over our patriotic Army, and has blessed the cause of the Confederacy with a second signal victory on the field already memorable by the gallant achievement of our troops.

Too much praise can not be bestowed upon the skill and daring of the commanding general who conceived, or the valor and hardihood of the troops who executed, the brilliant movement whose result is now communicated. After having driven from their intrenchments an enemy superior in numbers, and relieved from siege the city of Richmond, as heretofore communicated, our toil-worn troops advanced to meet another invading army, reenforced not only by the defeated army of General McClellan, but by the fresh corps of Generals Burnside and Hunter. After forced marches, with inadequate transportation, and across streams swollen to unusual height, by repeated combats they turned the position of the enemy, and forming a junction of their columns in the face of greatly superior forces, they fought the decisive battle of the 30th, the crowning triumph of their toil and valor.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

RICHMOND, September 2, 1862.

HEADQUARTERS,

Manassas Junction, via Rapidan, August 30—9 o'clock p. m.

To President DAVIS:

So far this army has steadily advanced and repulsed the frequent attacks of the enemy. The line of the Rappahannock and Warrenton has been relieved. Many prisoners are captured, and I regret quantities of stores had to be destroyed for want of transportation. Anderson is not yet up, and I hear nothing of those behind. We have Ewell, Trimble, and Taliaferro wounded, the latter slightly, the others not mortally.

R. E. LEE.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
Groveton, via Rapidan, August 30—10 p. m.

To President DAVIS:

This army achieved to-day, on the plains of Manassas, a signal victory over the combined forces of Generals McClellan and Pope. On the 28th and 29th each wing under Generals Longstreet and Jackson repulsed with valor attacks made on them separately. We mourn the loss of our gallant dead in every conflict, yet our gratitude to Almighty God for his mercies rises higher each day. To Him and to the valor of our troops a nation's gratitude is due.

R. E. LEE.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. Smith of North Carolina, from the Committee on Elections, reported as follows, to wit:

The committee to whom was referred a communication from the governor of Virginia in reference to the vacancy in the delegation from that State, occasioned by the resignation of A. G. Jenkins, a member of this House, with other papers pertaining thereto, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to report:

By section 4, Article I, of the Constitution, it is provided that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, subject to the provisions of this Constitution; but the Congress may, at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the times and places of choosing Senators."

By the fourth clause of the second section of the same article it is declared that, "When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies."

It is obvious from these provisions that the Constitution contemplates the enactment by the States of the necessary laws for securing a full representation in this body. Not only is this duty prescribed to their legislatures, but the executive authority of the States is required to be exercised in giving them effect when vacancies occur. It has been the practice under similar clauses in the Constitution of the United States to leave with the several States the duty of making such provisions as each may deem expedient for the election of their Representatives. The committee do not deem it proper to depart from this usage and assume powers not heretofore exercised and not required to be exercised by an existing emergency. The power of the State of Virginia over the subject is full and complete, and defects in the existing law may be remedied by the approaching called session of the general assembly.

The committee therefore recommend no further action in the premises except the adoption of the accompanying resolutions:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the House, ample power rests with the several States to provide for securing a full representation, and that no legislation on the part of Congress is necessary.

Resolved, That the Speaker communicate to the governor of Virginia a copy of the report and of these resolutions.

RICHMOND, VA., August 5, 1862.

HON. THOMAS S. BOCK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I hereby notify your honorable body that I have this day sent to the governor of Virginia my resignation as a member of the same.

ALBERT G. JENKINS.

JOHN LETCHER.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., September 5, 1862.

Hon. THOMAS S. BOCOCK,

Speaker of the House of Representatives, Confederate States of America.

SIR: In response to a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted August 26, 1862, asking for the number of soldier and other claims on file in the Second Auditor's Office for adjustment, the length of time they have been on file, and the reason they have not been earlier acted on, I have the honor to inclose herewith a report from the Second Auditor, giving the desired information. I have to state, in addition, that the full complement of clerks allowed by law has not hitherto been made for two reasons: First, because the absence of papers, as stated by the Auditor, would prevent their discharging their duties; and, secondly, that until the present week, sufficient office accommodation could not be procured for the use of this bureau.

Respectfully,

C. G. MEMMINGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, CONFEDERATE STATES,
SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
September 3, 1862.

Hon. THOMAS S. BOCOCK,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I have been furnished by the Clerk of the House of Representatives with a copy of a resolution of said House, of August 26, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Second Auditor be required to report to this House, at as early a day as practicable, the number of soldier and other claims on file in his office for adjustment, the length of time they have been on file, and the reason they have not been earlier acted upon."

In compliance with the above call, I have the honor to state that the number of claims for arrears of pay due deceased soldiers "on file in this office for adjustment" (unsettled) is 2,900. As to the "length of time they have been on file," it would be impossible to state precisely without preparing a minute statement in detail showing the date at which each case was filed. They have come in daily since 1st January last up to the present day; a very few cases, still unsettled, running back so far as the first-named date. "The reasons these claims have not been acted upon" are:

First. The passage of an act of Congress, approved February 15, 1862, which was construed as intending to take the settlement of soldiers' claims from the Auditor and devolve it upon the quartermasters of the respective regiments. Thus their examination and settlement was suspended in this office until, at my suggestion, the law was submitted to the Attorney-General, who, on the 9th of May, 1862, communicated his opinion that said act did not intend to dispense with an audit by the proper auditing office prior to payment by the Pay Department of the Army, as directed by the second section, and they were again proceeded with.

Second. The removal from this city in June last by the Adjutant and Quartermaster Generals, because of the proximity of the enemy, of the muster and pay rolls, to which daily reference was indispensable in making settlements of these claims, which was, therefore, suspended during the absence of those records; and further hindrance was experienced by the packing up in boxes, made expressly for the purpose, of all the records, books, and papers of this office (except a few in daily use), ready to be moved at a moment's notice to a place of security in case the safety of the city should have been seriously endangered by the presence of the enemy.

Third. The failure in many instances of captains to send in their rolls to the proper department, arising partly, I presume, from the constant movement of troops and casualties of service.

Fourth. The want of sufficient clerical force to bring up arrears arising as before stated, and to keep pace with the immensely increasing current influx of these claims. I may remark that a large portion of these claims, thus reported as remaining unsettled, have been regularly taken up and examined, but have been suspended and laid aside for want of necessary proof, evidence of service, etc.

The number of claims, other than deceased soldiers, "on file in this office for adjustment" (comprising claims of all kinds growing out of the war, but principally for supplies furnished) is 97, of which there have been examined and suspended for further proof 30, leaving 67 which remain unexamined, and of which nearly all were received in the last month—August.

This statement does not include claims of the State of South Carolina, under the act of December 11, 1861, a portion of which remains unsettled; or of the States of Mississippi and Louisiana, under the act of August 30, 1861, for which there has been no appropriation by Congress.

I beg leave, respectfully, in conclusion, to state that the force of this office is now, and always has been, greatly inadequate to the public wants, and most earnestly to suggest the absolute necessity of its being at once heavily increased in order that the public accounts and claims may be properly disposed of. One hundred intelligent, industrious accountants is the minimum number that would be sufficient for the purpose.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. S. TAYLOR,
Auditor.

Mr. Crockett moved that the communication and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed, with instructions to inquire what additional legislation, if any, be necessary.

Mr. Heiskell moved to amend the motion by striking out the word "Judiciary" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Military Affairs."

The amendment was lost, and the motion of Mr. Crockett was agreed to.

The Chair presented a message from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit to your honorable body an estimate of appropriation called for by the Secretary of War.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

which, with its accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Secretary of the Navy; which is as follows, to wit:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, September 6, 1862.

HON. THOMAS S. BOCK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: In response to the following resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 3d [5th] instant, "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to send to this House a copy of the official letter of Flag-Officer Forrest, touching the gallant exploits of Commander Taylor, in command of the little steamer Harmony, in her conflict with the enemy's frigate Savannah, which resulted in a heavy loss of men to said frigate and great injury to the same," I have the honor to transmit Moore, Pugh, Ralls, Sexton, Smith of Alabama, Smith of North Carolina, and Wright of Texas.

Nays: Barksdale, Bell, Bonham, Boyce, Horatio W. Bruce, Eli M. Bruce, Chambers, Chambliss, Chilton, Chrisman, Clapp, Clopton, Conrad, Conrow, Crockett, Curry, Davis, Dawkins, Farrow, Gartrell, Goode, Graham, Hartridge, Heiskell, Holt, Jones, Kenan of Georgia, Kenner, Lander, Lyon, Lyons, Machen, Marshall, McRae, McQueen, Miles, Perkins, Preston, Strickland, Swan, Trippe, Vest, Welsh, Wilcox, Wright of Georgia, and Mr. Speaker.

So the amendment to the amendment was lost.

The question then being on the amendment of Mr. Bonham,

Mr. Davis moved to amend by striking out all of the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That the act approved on the sixteenth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, known as "An act further to provide for the public defense," be, and the same is hereby, so enlarged and extended as to embrace all free white male citizens of the Confederate States of America between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, not to be discharged upon attaining the age of forty-five if enrolled and mustered into service before.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That retired commissioned officers of the Confederate Army shall have the right to furnish substitutes, and that this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. Holt moved that the bill and amendments be laid upon the table. The motion was lost.

And the first section of the bill being under consideration; which is as follows, to wit:

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That when the President shall consider an increase of the forces in the field necessary to repel invasions, or for the public safety in the pending war, he is authorized, as hereinafter provided, to call into the military service of the Confederate States for three years or during the present war, if it should be sooner ended, all white male citizens of the Confederate States, not legally exempted from such service, between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five years; and such authority shall exist in the President during the present war as to all persons who now are or may hereafter become eighteen years of age, and, when once enrolled, all persons between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years shall serve their full term: Provided, however, That the regiment raised under and by authority of the State of Texas and now in the service of said State for frontier defense is hereby exempted from the provisions and operations of this act: And provided, That if the President, in calling out troops into the service of the Confederate States, shall first call for only a part of the persons between the ages hereinbefore stated, he shall call for those between the ages of thirty-five and any other age less than forty-five, and apportion the same between the several States, taking into consideration their relative population between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five and the number of troops already furnished to the Army by the respective States under former acts, so far as the same may be practicable without departing from the principle of calling out troops according to age: And provided further, That in estimating the number of troops furnished by any State under former acts each State shall be credited with all the companies mustered into service from said State,

Mr. Smith of North Carolina moved to amend the same by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

That the President be authorized to call upon the several States for their respective quotas of a force, in the aggregate not exceeding three hundred thousand men, in addition to those already in the field, to serve for three years or the war, whereof so many shall be placed in the regiments of the States from which they are taken as are necessary to fill such regiments to the full number prescribed by the act of April sixteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and the residue of the quota shall be received in bodies organized by authority of the States: Provided, however, That the quota to be furnished by each State shall not exceed the difference between the whole number of persons therein, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, liable under the laws thereof to military service and not exempt, to be estimated according to the returns of the last census, and the number which such State has already furnished by volunteering, conscription, or otherwise to the Confederate Government for the term of three years or the war.

The House resolved itself into open session.

NINETEENTH DAY—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Wellons.

A message from the President was received, by his Private Secretary, Mr. Harrison.

The Chair laid before the House a message from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

Gen. Thomas C. Hindman in the Trans-Mississippi Department.

which, with its accompanying document, was read and ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Also, a message from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of War in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives requesting information relative to arrests, by military authority, of citizens of the Confederate States.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

which, with its accompanying document, was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
September 6, 1862.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a communication from the Quartermaster-General, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives requesting information relative to the payment of troops. The organization of the Army of the Confederate States gives a paymaster to each regiment by devolving the payment of troops on regimental quartermasters, a system by which we avoid at the same time all danger from delay in payment by the absence of the proper officer, as well as the hazard of transporting large sums of money from camp to camp, as would be the case if a corps of officers were employed for the sole purpose of paying the troops. The failures to pay regularly, as required by regulations, should disappear with the prompt and regular supply of funds to the quartermasters of the different regiments. The ability of the Government to do this, it is hoped, will increase with the further development of the means of the Treasury Department.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, September 5, 1862.

President Confederate States of America.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a letter from the Quartermaster-General in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the payment of troops.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. RANDOLPH,
Secretary of War.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
September 3, 1862.

HON. GEORGE W. RANDOLPH,
Secretary of War.

SIR: In reply to the communication of the President to the War Department, accompanying a resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the payment of troops, referred to this office for consideration and report, I have the honor to explain that the Army Regulations do not require the troops to be paid monthly.

Paragraph 1056 is in these words: "The troops will be paid in such manner that the arrears shall at no time exceed two months, unless the circumstances of the case render it unavoidable," etc.

Circumstances have arisen in numerous instances to cause four months, and occasionally six or eight months, to elapse between the dates of payment. This failure to pay is attributable not to the fact that quartermasters do not promptly forward their estimates for the funds requisite, but to the difficulty in obtaining money from the Treasury after requisitions have been sent in, owing to causes which, no doubt, will be fully explained by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury. It not unfrequently happens, though, that, owing to interruption of mail communication between the seat of government and the points at which the quartermasters are stationed, the estimates fail to reach the Department in season to be acted on, so that payment to the troops may not be deferred.

Again, a particular body of troops, after having been estimated for in one military department, may be removed to a different and distant point before the quartermaster's estimate has been acted on or responded to. The quartermaster whose duty it may be to procure funds to disburse to the command to which they are removed will not have embraced them in his estimate, and payment to them will, of course, be delayed.

The practice prevailed with the United States Government to pay troops at the end of every two months; never for a less period were companies mustered for pay.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. MYERS,
Quartermaster-General.

which was read and, with its accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the special order of business for the morning hour, which was a bill to provide for the further issue of Treasury notes.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The Chair also laid before the House a message from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
September 6, 1862.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a communication from the Quartermaster-General, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives requesting information relative to the payment of troops. The organization of the Army of the Confederate States gives a paymaster to each regiment by devolving the payment of troops on regimental quartermasters, a system by which we avoid at the same time all danger from delay in payment by the absence of the proper officer, as well as the hazard of transporting large sums of money from camp to camp, as would be the case if a corps of officers were employed for the sole purpose of paying the troops. The failures to pay regularly, as required by regulations, should disappear with the prompt and regular supply of funds to the quartermasters of the different regiments. The ability of the Government to do this, it is hoped, will increase with the further development of the means of the Treasury Department.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, September 5, 1862.

President Confederate States of America.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a letter from the Quartermaster-General in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the payment of troops.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. RANDOLPH,
Secretary of War.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
September 3, 1862.

HON. GEORGE W. RANDOLPH,
Secretary of War.

SIR: In reply to the communication of the President to the War Department, accompanying a resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the payment of troops, referred to this office for consideration and report, I have the honor to explain that the Army Regulations do not require the troops to be paid monthly.●

Paragraph 1056 is in these words: "The troops will be paid in such manner that the arrears shall at no time exceed two months, unless the circumstances of the case render it unavoidable," etc.

Circumstances have arisen in numerous instances to cause four months and occasionally six or eight months to elapse between the dates of payment. This failure to pay is attributable not to the fact that quartermasters do not promptly forward their estimates for the funds requisite, but to the difficulty in obtaining money from the Treasury after requisitions have been sent in, owing to causes which, no doubt, will be fully explained by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury. It not unfrequently happens, though, that, owing to interruption of mail communication between the seat of government and the points at which the quartermasters are stationed, the estimates fail to reach the Department in season to be acted on, so that payment to the troops may not be deferred.

Again, a particular body of troops, after having been estimated for in one military department, may be removed to a different and distant point before the quartermaster's estimate has been acted on or responded to. The quartermaster whose duty it may be to procure funds to disburse to the command to which they are removed will not have embraced them in his estimate, and payment to them will, of course, be delayed.

The practice prevailed with the United States Government to pay troops at the end of every two months; never for a less period were companies mustered for pay.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. MYERS,
Quartermaster-General.

which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments and Military Transportation.

The Chair also laid before the House a message from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: The circumstances necessarily surrounding an army operating in presence of an enemy render it inexpedient—next to impossible—to assemble frequent courts-martial, and to detail for them the best officers of the Army.

The ordinary attendant of the circumstances referred to is frequent offenses against military discipline and trespass upon the property of individuals inhabiting the country.

To correct these evils it is believed to be desirable that Congress should give authority to institute a commission to attend each army in the field, to be composed of men whose character and knowledge of the modes of administering justice would give the best assurance for the punishment of crime, the protection of private rights, and the security of the citizens of the country occupied by the Army.

Could courts-martial be assembled as frequently as occasion required, their functions, under existing laws, being limited to the consideration of offenses defined by the Rules and Articles of War, it will be perceived that a great variety of outrages against private rights might be committed, of which a court-martial could not directly take cognizance.

Under ordinary circumstances offenders in such cases would be turned over to the civil courts for trial. In a foreign country, or where the courts can not hold their sessions, this is impossible, and in the case of a marching army would, for obvious reasons, be ineffectual. The witnesses, whose testimony is indispensable to conviction, would generally follow the march of the army and be out of the reach of the courts.

The powers delegated by the Constitution "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces," and "to ordain and establish from time to time inferior courts," would seem ample to justify such legislation as is herein recommended, especially as the necessity for the ordinary forms of indictment and trial "for capital and otherwise infamous crimes" is expressly dispensed with by the Constitution "in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war."

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1862.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Doggett.

Mr. Collier, by consent, introduced joint resolutions of thanks to Capt. and Flag-Officer W. F. Lynch, of the Confederate States Navy, and the officers and men under him for gallant services at Aquia Creek, for the capture of the Fanny, and for the engagement at Roanoke Island; which was read the first and second times and, on motion of Mr. Collier, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. Kenan of Georgia, by consent, introduced

A bill to create and abolish certain offices, whereby the effective strength of the Army may be greatly increased; which was read the first and second times and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. Russell, by consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred several resolutions and bills relating to martial law, made the following report, viz:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration several resolutions and bills referred to them by the House, relating to martial law, respectfully report:

A few days after this Congress first assembled it enacted that "during the present invasion of the Confederate States the President shall have power to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in such cities, towns, and military districts as shall, in his judgment, be in such danger of attack by the enemy as to require the declaration of martial law." This is the entire act of February 27, 1862. It either assumed that the President had authority, without the aid of legislation, to declare martial law, or it was designed to confer that authority by very vague and imperfect legislation.

The President (who has used this power with exemplary moderation) proceeded to declare martial law in several places threatened with invasion, and it was soon discovered to have effects as then administered far beyond a mere suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. It was found, also, that the suspension of that writ by the act of Congress had been too general. To remedy the latter inconvenience, and to limit the duration of martial law, another act was passed by Congress, on the 19th day of April, 1862, confining the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus "to arrests made by the authorities of the Confederate Government or for offenses against the same," and limiting the duration of the former act to a period ending "thirty days after the next meeting of Congress," a period now about to expire.

Since the latter act was passed martial law has been declared in several districts by the President and by generals commanding armies; but these declarations of the generals have been annulled by the President as unauthorized. They have served to call the attention of Congress and the country anew to the subject of martial law. The vast extent of power assumed in some of these instances to have been conferred by military officers on themselves by a declaration of martial law has challenged a more thorough investigation of the nature and foundation of martial law than may have been deemed practicable where in a season of great public danger Congress first legislated on the subject. It was not then referred to a committee by the House.

Martial law was part of the ancient common law of England, but its pristine vigor has long since been paralyzed in that country by the progress of liberty. In the beginning it was the law administered in the courts held by the Lord High Constable or by the Earl Marshal of England and his subordinates, the provost-marshals and lieutenants of counties. The law itself was commonly described by reference to the jurisdiction of the court of the marshal. That jurisdiction embraced matters of war and chivalry and contracts made beyond sea concerning arms. Beyond these subjects the jurisdiction of the marshal's court was disputed, and, indeed, was forbidden by statute in the thirteenth year of the reign of Richard II.

The methods of procedure in these courts were summary, excluding the guarded modes of trial observed in the ordinary civil tribunals. In the adjudication of questions arising in the army they proceeded upon the axiom that the power of the King was absolute over the army in the field and over the life of every person attached to the army in time of war. This power was not controlled by any law. The King, it is said, might put to death at will any soldier in the field. His commands were law to the army and to the courts of the marshals. Thus, in effect, absolute power administered by military courts in summary proceedings constituted martial law.

No authority to extend martial law over persons not connected with the army was incident to military command. But such authority was claimed to belong to the King, at least in times of war and insurrection, as one of his royal prerogatives for governing the nation, as a political no less than as a military power of the Crown. But whether, according to the ancient common law, it was a prerogative of the King to cause martial law to be put in force in time of peace, even as to the army, or to extend it at any time over civilians; these and other questions of like nature were long and severely contested. Usually the pretensions and practices of arbitrary monarchs in turbulent times were in contrast with the unheeded opinions of courts and jurists. But it was generally admitted by those who condemned as well as those who invoked its exercise, that martial law, whenever and wherever it could lawfully prevail, had the effect to institute arbitrary power and the jurisdiction of courts-martial.

During the reign of Charles I the Parliament by the petition of right asserted the ancient liberties of the people of England, and, among other grievances, denounced the abuse of martial law, alleging that persons not connected with the army, in common with soldiers, had been tried by the course of martial law under commissions from the Crown, and affirming that this was unlawful. After the long struggles which marked the seventeenth century the Bill of Rights and the subsequent practice of Parliament placed the rights of the subject in this regard on still firmer and plainer ground.

Martial law, as applicable to the army, has been superseded in England and in this country by that which we now call military law—a system of regulations enacted by the legislature for the government of the military forces. No other martial law is now known as applicable to the government of the army. No other is necessary, for, instead of the absolute will of a monarch, we have a system of rules carefully digested and matured by experience.

But the question remains whether martial law, which has been superseded in its principal and ordinary field of operation by modern military law, may be still put in force in its secondary and extraordinary application to citizens not in the army. If it can be, will it still have its ancient effect of instituting arbitrary power and the jurisdiction of courts-martial wherever it is declared? If not, what are the limitations upon it? And, finally, by whom may it be declared?

That some things may still be lawfully done which were done three centuries ago under the name of martial law can not be denied. For example, the writ of habeas corpus can be suspended by Congress in certain exigencies by virtue of a clause in the Constitution. But to suspend that writ is not to establish martial law with its summary proceedings and absolute power. Although, when the writ is suspended the citizen may be restrained of his liberty, he can be tried and punished only according to the laws of the land.

A military commander may destroy a citizen's house when it becomes necessary for the safety of his army. In a proper case, the act would be in accordance with the Constitution and the laws, for they devolve upon the commander an authority and a duty which, in the case supposed, can not be performed without destroying the house. The citizen then would have no recourse against the commander, but must look to the Government for indemnity. It is a familiar principle that when the law has conferred authority upon an officer to do any act, it carries equal authority to do whatever is necessarily incident to that act, notwithstanding he may happen to injure the property of another. But, in every case, he must show the authority of the law and the necessity of the occasion.

According to the same principle, a commander occupying a town may sometimes restrain the egress and ingress of citizens to the extent necessary for the safety of his army, or he may, for necessary cause, interrupt the pursuits of the citizens. He may (especially in a war like the present) exert many other unusual powers at or near the place occupied by his force. But if, by any such exercise of power a citizen be injured, the officer must justify the particular act causing the injury by showing that this very act was necessarily or properly incident to the authority and duty devolved on him by the laws.

Congress, also, by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution—such, for example, as the powers to declare war and to raise armies—may authorize acts to be done which will incidentally injure a citizen or interfere with the exercise of his rights. But this is justified by a constitutional principle, and not by a suspension of the Constitution. Every such law must stand or fall alone, and be judged according to the constitutional standard.

All this, however, is very different from a power in a commander, or in the President, or in Congress to declare martial law, and then, by virtue of martial law, to exercise arbitrary, absolute, and unlimited power. According to the constitutional and legal principles which have been stated, the Government can exact ample powers for the public defense, Congress may fulfill all its constitutional functions, and a commander may perform all his lawful duties without danger to the public liberty or unnecessary injury to the citizen. But if Congress, or the President, or a military commander may first determine that martial law is necessary, and having declared it, then exercise arbitrary power over all persons and things within the district subject to martial law, every injury to private rights and public liberty will be justified by a stroke of the pen and by the aggressor. In a country governed by a written constitution and by certain laws this is simply impossible. It is impossible, therefore, that martial law in its ancient and customary sense can exist within the Confederate States. Neither in peace nor war can soldiers be subject to any martial law inconsistent with the regulations enacted by Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, nor can citizens be subject to any power inconsistent with the Constitution or laws.

But this may be conceded, and yet it may be said that martial law in a modern and modified sense can be established. If this assertion leads only to a dispute about the meaning of words, it is insignificant. If it means that Congress can enact regulations for the government of the Army and call them "martial law;" or can, by virtue of the Constitution, enact laws conferring certain powers on the President and call them "martial law;" or that the President and military commanders may do those acts, which, in time of war, are necessarily incident to the duties devolved on them by the Constitution and laws, and call this "martial law," the assertion may be suffered to pass as unfit for contestation. If martial law can go no further than this, it leaves us to judge every law that may be passed by Congress, and every act that may be done by the President or a military officer, by standards which are well known and universally respected. But it is superfluous to declare martial law for the purpose of justifying that which is authorized already by the Constitution and laws of the land. This, however, is not martial law, since no usage has attached such a sense to the phrase; but it is something else, which may be arbitrarily styled martial law, with no effect but to make confusion and uncertainty.

If it be meant that a declaration of martial law has some other effect, not so broad as it had under the Tudors or yet so narrow as to keep strictly within the Constitution and the laws of the land, it is wholly unintelligible. Nothing can be more repugnant to that certainty which, in the laws, is essential to the maintenance of right and of liberty. Whatever may be necessary in that sense should be plainly enacted. If the President or a military commander can set up a vague power not confined by law nor regulated by law, he may exalt the military above the civil authority to an unknown height.

But conceding for a moment that in any sense martial law can be established, by whom can it be established? So far as it formerly related to the government of the Army, the power to enact it is distinctly vested in Congress; for the Constitution expressly grants Congress the power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." So far as any authority existed to extend martial law over civilians, it pertained by the ancient common law in some degree to the King as one of his prerogatives for governing the nation. In modern times it is believed that whenever a necessity for declaring martial law over any district is apprehended in England, the Parliament provides for the exigency by a statute carefully defining the powers to be exercised and the mode of exercising them. Ever since the Bill of Rights, it has been settled in that country that the King could not declare martial law, and no kind of martial law has been tolerated except that which is authorized and regulated from time to time by the legislature.

Under our written Constitution we can not invoke the common law to determine what authority belongs to our Government or what is the constitutional distribution of political power among its great departments. Although it may be true that at common law the Crown had authority in certain exigencies to subject the people to martial law as a branch of royal prerogative, it does not follow that either our chief Executive Magistrate, or Congress, or our entire Government inherits the same power. The President, indeed, is by the Constitution "Commander in Chief of the Army," and as such he may exercise all authority necessarily incident to that office according to the laws. But his authority over the Army is subject to the regulations enacted by Congress for its government, and his authority over the people, either as Commander in Chief or in any other capacity, is subject to the Constitution and to the laws enacted by Congress in pursuance of the Constitution. He can exert no power inconsistent with law, and, therefore, he can not declare martial law, except in an insignificant sense, which, as before explained, neither adds to nor detracts from the force of the ordinary laws.

Since it has long been well settled that Congress alone can authorize a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, it might have been inferred that the personal liberty of the citizen can never be invaded without legislative authority; and the truth seems axiomatic that the laws can be suspended only by the law-making power. "All legislative powers herein delegated," says the Constitution, "shall be vested in a Congress of the Confederate States." Congress is also "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution 'all powers vested by the Constitution' in any department or office" of the Government, including the President. It follows that no law can exist by authority of the Confederate States unless it be enacted by Congress. Either martial law is properly styled law or it is not; if it is, it can only be established or authorized by Congress; if it is not, it is lawless power and can not exist in a Government such as ours. The supremacy of law is the safeguard of liberty.

The Supreme Court of the late Union decided that a certain State legislature could, in time of insurrection, declare martial law; but it did not define martial law. In whatever sense it may be declared, the power to establish or authorize it seems to belong exclusively to the legislature, whether of a State or of the Confederate States. The exigencies for which it is designed, the considerations which determine its propriety, and the results to which it tends are political as often as military, and they should be submitted to legislative discretion. We need not now inquire whether any State legislature has other powers in this regard than Congress or the Confederate Government.

When our forces occupy an enemy's country, the people of that country are not shielded against military authority by our Constitution or laws. The commanders or the President as Commander in Chief, being intrusted with an army for the very purpose of injuring the enemy and being unrestrained with respect to the enemy's people by any law (except, of course, international law), may exercise unlimited authority over them. Since, in such circumstances we can not administer any other law, it is inevitable that, under the name of martial law or otherwise, the will of the commander shall stand for law to the inhabitants under his military power.

But as to our own citizens and within our own country, no authority in the name of the Confederate Government ought to be tolerated except that which is regulated by the Constitution and laws. If martial law over the people be necessary in any case, it should be regulated and defined in a sense consistent with the Constitution by distinct enactments. But since the phrase "martial law" is, at best, ambiguous, and since, by reference to ancient usage, it may convey ideas dangerous to liberty, it is wiser in our legislation to substitute for it such positive regulations as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. Lyons offered

A resolution that the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report a bill for the establishment of a supreme court.

Mr. Davis moved that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was lost, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. Smith of North Carolina, from the Committee on Elections, reported as follows, to wit:

The Committee on Elections, to whom were referred the petition of J. P. Johnson, contesting the seat of A. H. Garland, and claiming to have been elected Representative from the Third Congressional district of Arkansas, and certain other papers relating thereto, have had the same under consideration, and report:

When the evidence produced in support of the contestant's claim was before the committee at the last session of Congress, it was found to be so conflicting and unsatisfactory as to induce them to recommend the allowance of further time to the parties to prepare their respective allegations and proofs. To this end, and with a view of conforming proceedings to the provisions of the act of the Congress of the United States in reference to contested elections, they reported to the House a series of resolutions as follows:

"Resolved, First. That thirty days be allowed the contestant to amend his notice, if he so desire.

"Second. That the sitting member be allowed thirty days after such amendment is made, and notice thereof, or after notice of contestant's declining to amend, in which to make and serve his answer thereto on contestant, setting out in said answer the grounds on which he rests the validity of his own and denies the election of contestant.

"Third. That after service of the answer or expiration of the time limited therefor, sixty days be allowed the parties to take evidence, which shall be confined to the allegations and denials contained in the answer and notice, and that the same be taken and transmitted to the House under the rules prescribed by the act of Congress of the United States, approved February nineteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, entitled 'An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections.'"

The House concurred in the recommendation and adopted the resolutions, thus prescribing the form of proceeding to be pursued in conducting the contest.

Soon after this action on the part of the House, on the 5th day of April, contestant amended his notice and caused a copy to be delivered to the sitting member. The latter upon his return to Arkansas prepared his answer, now before the committee, a copy of which he sent to the sheriff of Desha County, the residence of Mr. Johnson, with instructions to deliver the same to him. This was not done, and for his failure to do so the sheriff returned the paper with the following indorsements:

"Came to hand April 27, 1862.

"Not executed on account of Jilson P. Johnson being absent from my county May 27, 1862.

Further and additional evidence has been offered before the committee by both parties. That of contestant consists in transcripts from the poll books of the several precincts or places of voting in Arkansas County, deposited in the county clerk's office by the judges of election, verified by the certificate of the clerk and his official seal. These transcripts show an aggregate vote in that county of 133 for contestant and 195 for the sitting member, and an error in the returns made to the governor, the correction of which gives to contestant a plurality of 8 votes in the district.

The sitting member has taken the deposition of W. E. Morgan, clerk of the county court of Union County, for the purpose of showing a loss of 6 votes, to which he was entitled in that county. The deposition is taken without notice, and the committee do not hesitate to reject it. Its admission would not, however, change the result as dependent upon other evidence.

In their examination of the case, the committee encounter a difficulty in the mode of authenticating the transcripts and the absence of proper certificates as to the official character and attestations of the clerk. They do not profess to pursue the requirements of the act of Congress in reference to contested elections embodied in the resolution of the House. By that act the testimony of witnesses may be taken upon ten days' notice before any Confederate "judge, chancellor, judge or justice of a court of record of any State," or "mayor, recorder, or intendant of any town or city," and when no such officers reside in the Congressional district, before "any two justices of the peace" residing therein. The magistrate or justices are empowered "to require the production of papers, and on the refusal or neglect of any person to produce and deliver up any paper or papers in his possession pertaining to said election, or to produce and deliver up certified or sworn copies of the same in case they may be official papers," he shall be liable to certain penalties, and it is then declared that

"All papers thus produced, and all certified or sworn copies of official papers shall be transmitted by said magistrate with the testimony of witnesses to the clerk of the House of Representatives."—Brighly's Digest, Elections, sec. 21.

Nor do the transcripts comply with the requirements of the act of the Congress of the United States of March 27, 1804. This act provides that "All records and exemplifications of office books, which are or may be kept in any public office of any State, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any other court or office in any other State by the attestation of the keeper of the said records or books and the seal of his office thereto annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county or district, as the case may be, in which such office is or may be kept, or of the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or the keeper of the great seal of the State, that the said attestation is in due form and by the proper officer; and the said certificate, if given by the presiding justice of a court, shall be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify under his hand and the seal of his office that the said presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or if the said certificate be given by the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or the keeper of the great seal, it shall be under the great seal of the State in which the said certificate is made."—Brighly's Digest, Evidence, sec. 10.

The transcripts have not been taken and transmitted according to the resolution of the House, nor do they come clothed with the forms of authentication prescribed by the general law.

The question then presents itself, Can the committee or the House dispense with a part of these requirements; and if so, to what extent in admitting evidence warranted by neither statute? The question is not free from difficulty, and the committee have bestowed upon it their careful consideration.

The proceedings before them are essentially judicial, determining not only political but personal rights. In this light they are evidently regarded by the act regulating contested elections and the former action of the House. As such they do not feel authorized to dispense with those safeguards which the law has thrown around evidence of this kind for the security of personal rights. They deem it more prudent to adhere to fundamental principles and to prescribed rules, and leave for the guidance of others a precedent finding its sanctions in the matured wisdom and ripened experience in which these enactments had their origin. They therefore report the following resolution:

Resolved, That A. H. Garland is entitled to the seat now held by him.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Crockett, by consent, from the minority of the same committee, made a report; which is as follows, to wit:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Elections, to whom were referred the petition of the Hon. J. P. Johnson, "claiming the seat in the House as the Representative from the Third district in the State of Arkansas, and asking that he be permitted to contest the seat of the sitting member, Hon. A. H. Garland," differing from the majority of the committee, beg leave to present this minority report.

At the last session of Congress a majority of the committee recommended the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, First. That thirty days be allowed the contestant to amend his notice, if he so desire.

"Second. That the sitting member be allowed thirty days after such amendment is made, and notice thereof, or after notice of contestant's declining to amend, in which to make and serve his answer thereto on contestant, setting out in said answer the grounds on which he rests the validity of his own and denies the election of contestant.

"Third. That after service of the answer or expiration of the time limited therefor, sixty days be allowed the parties to take evidence, which shall be confined to the allegations and denials contained in the answer and notice, and that the same be taken and transmitted to the House under the rules prescribed by the act of Congress of the United States, approved February nineteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, entitled 'An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested elections.'"

A minority of the committee also made a report and recommended the adoption of the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Honorable J. P. Johnson is duly elected Representative from the Third Congressional district of the State of Arkansas, and as such is entitled to the seat in this House as the Representative from said Third district." This resolution was rejected by a vote of ——— in the affirmative and ——— in the negative.

The House thereupon adopted the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee, which in effect postponed the case for future proof to be taken under certain rules, allowing the parties the privilege of amending their pleadings, if they so decided. It will at once be perceived by an examination of the report of the committee that they do not attempt to decide the question, which at last must control the action of the House, namely:

Did contestant or the sitting member receive a plurality of the votes cast at said election? Indeed, the intimation is pretty clear from the whole tenor of the report, in the opinion of the committee, that contestant had been elected, but had failed to show it by the highest grade of evidence of which the case was susceptible, and therefore time was granted to obtain the proof.

Immediately after this action on the part of the House, to wit, on the 5th of April, the contestant, availing himself of the privilege granted him, amended his notice, in which in precise and apt allegations he acquaints the sitting member of the grounds relied on for contesting his seat. A copy of this notice was served on defendant the same day. The sitting member failed or neglected to have a copy of his answer served on the contestant within the time prescribed by the resolution of the last session, and the notice of the contestant as originally given and as amended remain unanswered to this time. No excuse or apology was offered at the last session by the defendant for his failure to answer the original notice, unless it be found in his objection to its sufficiency.

The objection to this notice was overruled by the committee, and doubtless the defendant would have then been given an opportunity of answering had he asked leave to do so.

The committee, in their report at this session, state that the defendant "upon his return to Arkansas prepared his answer, now before the committee, a copy of which he sent to the sheriff of Desha County, the residence of Mr. Johnson, with instructions to deliver the same to him. This was not done, and for his failure to do so the sheriff returned the paper with the following indorsements:

"Came to hand April 27, 1862.

"Not executed on account of Jilson P. Johnson being absent from my county May 27, 1862.

The impression left upon the mind from reading this part of the report would be that the contestant's absence from his county was the cause of the failure of the defendant to have his answer served, and yet the fact is we have the concurrent written testimony of both contestant and defendant that the former was at home during the entire time within which the answer was to be served. See amended petition of contestant and written statement of facts of defendant.

What the committee mean in their report by saying the answer of defendant to the amended notice is "now before the committee" we are at a loss to conjecture. If it is meant to say it is or was before the committee in the legal character of a response or answer, we must be permitted to say we did not so understand the action of the committee. Upon the contrary, we understand it as ruled out of the case for all legal purposes, other than as tending to show an effort on the part of defendant to answer in time.

The amended notice then remains unanswered and by no fault of contestant. Indeed, the defendant has not even asked permission to file his answer nunc pro tunc, but stakes his defense entirely upon the ground that contestant has failed in his proof.

The question arises, What legal effect follows from the failure to answer? The notice and answer constitute the pleadings in this case, under the act of Congress governing. Why does the law require contestant to give the sitting member notice in writing of his intention to contest the seat? Obviously that defendant may know the ground relied on, so that when he answers he may force an issue to be tried by traversing the allegations of the notice, or may confess them and set up another in avoidance. The whole office of all pleading is to form an issue, to be tried. If the defendant fails to answer, controverting the allegations of the contestant, there is no issue to try.

The well-established rule of pleading, universal in its application, is, that all material allegations must be regarded as admitted until denied. The material allegation of the notice is, that contestant received a plurality of eight votes in the district. It is not denied—must it not be taken to be true? Does not every rule of pleading known to the books, as well as every rule of logic known to the logician, require it to be regarded as established? If taken as true, what judgment shall the House, acting here as it does in a quasi judicial character, render? We insist it is compelled to decide against the right of the sitting member to the seat. This consequence must follow, unless every rule of pleading and logic is set at defiance. In deciding that the sitting member is not legally entitled to the seat, it by no means follows that the contestant is. The judgment that ousts the sitting member is one thing; the judgment that gives the seat to the contestant is essentially a different thing. Each House has the exclusive right of judging of the qualification, election, and virtues of its own members, and therefore he who claims a seat must not rely upon the weakness of the title of some other claimant, but must show he is entitled to it by affirmative proof.

In the opinion of the undersigned, the failure to answer the original and amended notice in this case must have the effect of depriving the sitting member of his seat, even in the absence of proof, but would not have the effect of giving the seat to the contestant.

It will be perceived by examination of the notice in this case that the substantive charge is that there was a mistake to the prejudice of contestant in making out the abstract of the vote of Arkansas county by the clerk, justice, and householder, that was forwarded to the governor, and upon which he acted in granting the certificate of election, which, when corrected, shows he was elected by eight votes.

To support this allegation the contestant offered in evidence copies of the poll books from each township or voting precinct of Arkansas County, certified by the clerk of said county under seal of office to be correct transcripts from the originals, as they remain on file in his office. This evidence was rejected by the committee, because in their opinion the same was improperly authenticated.

In support of their view the House is referred to the act of Congress relating to contested elections, and the act of March 27, 1804. We are at a loss to see the application of either to the case before the House. The act respecting contested elections is merely cumulative, and whilst it prescribes one mode of taking testimony in cases of contested elections, does not at all interfere with the well-established rules of evidence as recognized by the common law, or by the statutes of the several States. The statute referred to, as well as the rule laid down by the House at the last session, applies only to the case where an answer has been served in time. Such is the express language of the statute and the resolution of last session. Indeed the statute does not provide for taking testimony where there is no answer, for the obvious reason that in the contemplation of the lawmakers no proof in such case would be required, and such we take to have been the sense of this House from the language employed in the resolution of last session. The act of March 27, 1804, relates exclusively to courts, technically speaking, and provides for procuring and authenticating record evidence of one State to be used in evidence in the courts of another or sister State. Now we respectfully submit that this House is not a court, and especially it is not a court of one of the States composing this Confederacy. The statutes of Arkansas provide for the introduction as evidence of office copies from the records of one court in any other court within the State, when certified by the clerk under seal of his office. Why shall the evidence be digested here? Admit this evidence and the election of the contestant is demonstrated. With conclusive evidence before us that the contestant was elected, we can not but regard the retention of the seat by the sitting member as a flagrant disregard of the rights of the electors composing the district, as well as the rights of the contestant. Whereupon, we recommend the following as a substitute for the resolution of the committee:

Resolved, That Honorable Jilson P. Johnson is duly elected Representative from the Third Congressional district of Arkansas, and as such is entitled to his seat in this House.

JNO. W. CROCKETT.
JAMES B. DAWKINS.
G. G. VEST.

The report was ordered to be printed.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the special order, which was a bill to fill up existing companies, battalions, squadrons, or regiments of the Provisional Army, etc.

And the question being on the amendment of Mr. Chrisman, to add to the end of the bill the following words, viz:

Provided, That the President is authorized to suspend the execution of this act, or the acts to which this is an amendment, or any special provision or provisions of said acts, in any locality when he believes such suspension will promote the public good; and that in such localities, and during said suspension, the President is authorized to receive troops into the Confederate service under any of the acts passed by the Confederate Congress prior to the passage of the act to further provide for the public defense, approved sixteenth April, eighteen hundred and sixty-two,

The same was agreed to.

The question then recurring on the amendment of Mr. Davis to the amendment of Mr. Bonham, which is as follows, to wit: Strike out all of the same and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the act approved on the sixteenth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, known as "An act further to provide for the public defense," be, and the same is hereby, so enlarged and extended as to embrace all free white male citizens of the Confederate States of America between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, not to be discharged upon attaining the age of forty-five if enrolled and mustered into service before.

Be it further enacted, That retired commissioned officers of the Confederate Army shall have the right to furnish substitutes, and that this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage,

Mr. McLean called for the yeas and nays;

Which were ordered,

Yeas: Atkins, Barksdale, Horatio W. Bruce, Eli M. Bruce, Burnett,

Sec. 2. The calls shall be made upon the governors of the respective States of this Confederacy for the proportion which each should furnish, having reference to the number of free white male citizens of said States not engaged in the service of the Confederate States, and not exempt by the laws of the Confederate States from military duty, between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five years; said calls shall designate how many of said troops are wanted to fill up the companies, squadrons, battalions, or regiments from said State, how many are wanted as organized companies, squadrons, battalions, or regiments, and how many to be held as a reserve in camps of instruction or otherwise as the call may prescribe; and a period shall be fixed in each call within which the governors, respectively, are requested to furnish said troops, which shall not be less than thirty days from the date of said call, within which period any person subject to perform military duty in said State may volunteer and join any company from said State for the filling up of which the call may in part have been made, but said company shall not by volunteers be increased beyond its maximum legal number, and the persons so volunteering shall be counted as part of the quota to be furnished by said State, and shall conform to rules to be prescribed by the War Department for ascertaining the number so volunteering.

SEC. 3. If the governors, respectively, shall consent to raise the troops aforesaid, they may resort to enrollment, drafting, or in any other manner deemed more efficient, and which may be prescribed by the laws of said State, for the raising of the same; and in raising such troops, it shall be competent for the governors, respectively, to divide the persons liable to military duty into classes from which to furnish the quota desired, according as they may consider shall best subserve the wants and interests of their States respectively. Should any governor decline to raise said troops, or having consented to do so, fail to raise them within the time specified in the President's call, then the President shall be authorized and required to cause to be enrolled all the white male citizens of said State not legally exempt from military service by the laws of the Confederate States, and who shall not then be in the service of said Confederate States, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, in the same manner as is prescribed by an act entitled "An act further to provide for the public defense," approved April sixteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may proceed to select by lot from among the whole number the quota called for from such State, and the remainder may return to their homes, but subject to return to the camp of instruction upon the requirement of the President: Provided, That for good cause the time allowed to any of the executives of the States may be extended for raising their respective quotas by the President: Provided further, That when said troops shall be raised in any State by order of the President and not by the governor, persons subject to military duty shall, any time before their enrollment, have the privilege of volunteering in the same manner and under like restrictions as if said quotas had been furnished by the governor of said State.

SEC. 4. The troops thus raised shall serve for three years or during the present war, if it should be sooner ended, and shall not be discharged by reason of having passed the age of forty-five years before such term of service expires.

SEC. 5. The troops which may be called for in organized bodies, and which the governors, respectively, may furnish, shall be officered in the first instance by the authority of the State, but the filling of vacancies thereafter shall be according to the laws of the Confederate States.

SEC. 6. That the persons brought into military service by this act shall be assigned to any company now in the service of the Confederate States which they may prefer to join, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish, to secure the filling up of existing companies, squadrons, battalions, or regiments from the respective States: Provided, That the right of volunteering in, or of being assigned to, any company shall not interfere with the objects of this act, or produce inequality or confusion in the different arms of the service.

SEC. 7. That the powers hereby conferred upon the President of the Confederate States shall exist only during the present war, and the provisions of this bill shall be applicable whenever, pending this war, calls as aforesaid shall be made.

Mr. Chambers called the question; which was seconded.

The reading of the amendment having been called for, Mr. Foote made the point that it was out of order—the question having been called and seconded.

The Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. Foote appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the question being put,

Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

The same was decided in the affirmative.

The amendment of Mr. Chilton was lost.

Mr. Hanly moved to amend the first section of the bill; which is as follows, to wit:

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The Chair presented a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the meeting of requisitions on the Treasury Department; which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

The Chair presented a communication from the Secretary of War in relation to the finding of the court-martial in the case of Major Hesse; which was read and on motion laid upon the table.

On motion, leave of absence was granted Mr. Goode.

Mr. Lyon offered

A resolution that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Demopolis, in Marengo, to Falkland, in Greene County, and one from Demopolis to Jefferson, in Marengo County, Ala.; which was read and agreed to.

A resolution in relation to the conviction of forgers and counterfeiters of Confederate Treasury notes, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to offer a reward for the apprehension and conviction of persons engaged in forging or uttering counterfeit Treasury notes; which was read the first and second times.

On motion of Mr. Kenner, the rules were suspended, the bill was taken up, and having been read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to offer a reward not to exceed five thousand dollars for the apprehension and conviction of any person engaged in forging or uttering counterfeit Confederate Treasury notes.

The amendment was lost.

Mr. Foote demanded the question; which was ordered, and the bill was engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

On motion, leave of absence was granted Mr. McDowell.

Mr. Kenner, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred a bill to compensate the marshals and their assistants for taking the census in 1860, in those States now forming the Southern Confederacy, made the following report, viz:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill to be entitled "An act to compensate the marshals and their assistants for taking the census in eighteen hundred and sixty, in those States now forming the Southern Confederacy," have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report thereon:

The bill proposes to provide compensation to marshals and their assistants for services rendered in taking the census in 1860, under appointments made by the United States. The services were rendered to the United States, and the right to compensation from that Government had accrued before the secession of the Confederate States.

The question presented by the bill then, is simply this: Is there any obligation upon the Government of the Confederate States to assume and pay for services rendered to the United States by persons at the time of the rendition of such service belonging to the United States, but since the separation forming a part of the Confederate States?

The committee, in considering this question, have not had reference alone to services rendered before the separation, by marshals and their assistants in taking the census of 1860, but have embraced in their examination other questions of a similar character, which may and doubtless will arise, where citizens of the Confederate States may have had unsettled transactions with the Government of the United States at the time of the separation. If we acknowledge the principle that, because the States now composing the Confederacy derived some benefit and advantage from the taking of the census in 1860, that the Confederate States ought, therefore, to assume and pay a debt due from the United States, we establish a precedent unsafe to the Treasury and of questionable obligation.

Such a precedent would require the payment of all just claims held by citizens of the Confederate States against the Government of the United States for services rendered before the separation; for in all such cases, it might, as well as in the present, be alleged that such services were, to some extent, beneficial to the Confederate States while they formed a part of the United States.

Your committee, therefore, recommend that the bill committed to them do not pass.

Mr. Kenner asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, that it be placed upon the Calendar, and that the report be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. Kenner, from the same committee, to which was referred sundry amendments of the Senate to a bill of this House entitled "An act to provide for the further issue of Treasury notes," reported the same back, with the recommendation that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate, which are as follows, to wit:

First. In line 12, section 1, strike out "twelfth" and insert in lieu thereof "eighteenth."

Second. Strike out the second section.

Third. Insert the following independent section:

"SEC. 3. That the authority given to the Secretary of the Treasury in the second section of an act entitled 'An act to provide further means for the support of the Government,' approved April eighteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, to issue in exchange for Treasury notes, bonds or certificates to be reconvertible in the same, at the pleasure of the holder, shall be extended from fifty millions to one hundred millions of dollars: But the said authority shall be exercised under all the conditions and limitations prescribed in the said act."

The rules being suspended, the amendments were taken up, and the same were agreed to.

Mr. Miles, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred reported the same back, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it lie upon the table; which was agreed to.

Mr. Miles, from the same committee, to which was referred

A bill concerning partisan rangers, reported the same back, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be printed and placed upon the Calendar; which was agreed to.

Mr. Hilton, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred

A resolution in relation to the appointment of adjutants for independent battalions, reported a bill, to be entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for the appointment of adjutants of regiments and legions of the grade of subaltern in addition to the subalterns attached to companies;'" which was read the first and second times.

The rules were suspended, and the bill was taken up, engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Garnett, from the same committee, to which was referred a joint resolution of thanks to Maj. Gen. John Bankhead Magruder, reported the same back, with the recommendation that it pass with an amendment.

The rules were suspended;

The resolution was taken up, and having been read as follows, viz:

Resolved, That the thanks of Congress are due and are hereby tendered to Major General John Bankhead Magruder, late commander of the Army of the Peninsula, and the officers and men under his command, who in the battle of Bethel, the first and one of the most important battles of the war, obtained a signal victory over the enemy, the thanks of Congress are due and are hereby tendered to General Magruder for his distinguished services as commander of the Army of the Peninsula during an arduous year's campaign in which he illustrated the character of the Southern soldier by the activity, zeal, skill, and endurance with which he supplied the want of numbers and held in check a greatly superior force of the enemy; and to the officers and men under his command for the great fortitude, patriotism, and gallantry with which they performed their part in the defense of the Peninsula against the superior forces of the enemy,

Mr. Garnett, from the committee, moved to amend the same by striking out all of the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following words, viz:

The Congress of the Confederate States do resolve, That the thanks of Congress are hereby tendered to Major-General John Bankhead Magruder and to the officers and men under his command for their gallantry and distinguished services in the first battle of the war at Bethel, and in the protracted defense of the Peninsula for many months against the overwhelming numbers and boundless resources of the enemy.

Resolved further, That this resolution be communicated to General Magruder.

The rules were suspended;

The resolution was taken up, and the amendment was agreed to.

And the resolution as amended was engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Foote, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred resolutions in relation to the policy of the war, reported the same back, with the recommendation that they pass with the following amendments, to wit:

Majority report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred certain resolutions relating to the true policy of the war, and recommending to the President the issuance of a proclamation touching the free navigation of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the opening of the market of the South to the inhabitants of the Northwestern States, upon certain terms and conditions, have had the same under consideration, and now report back said resolutions, with one or two slight amendments, and recommend that they be adopted. The expediency of conducting the war in which we are engaged with all possible activity, and of carrying that war into the enemy's country, so soon as the same shall be found practicable, is believed to be now universally admitted by all enlightened men who have given their attention to the subject. It is evident that we must rely alone upon our own energies for success in the struggle of arms which is now in progress. In the present condition of affairs it is quite manifest that in order to bring the sanguinary struggle in which we are engaged to an early termination it will be necessary that every portion of our Army should be kept in a state of constant readiness for active exertion, and that no opportunity should be neglected of striking the forces of the enemy, wherever to be found upon Southern soil, with that boldness and heroic energy which are so certain to secure to our arms the most signal success. It is equally manifest that the enemy will never be willing to desist from the unjust and ferocious war which they are now waging until the evils and inconveniences thereof shall have been brought home fully to themselves. When our valiant and disciplined armies (enhanced in numbers and in strength, as it is hoped they will shortly be) shall have once found their way to the heart of the enemy's country, and have inflicted a just retaliation upon those who have so ruthlessly ravaged our territories, pillaged our towns, and desolated our homes, it is to be reasonably expected that even they will at least be able to discern the rank injustice and brutal cruelty which they have compelled us to experience, and for the perpetration of which they have not been heretofore subjected to anything like adequate punishment.

Your committee are well satisfied that the issuing of some such proclamation by the President, as that described in the resolutions referred to them, at such time as he shall deem expedient, could not but be attended with the most salutary effects. It is an undoubted fact that the Government at Washington, aided by unscrupulous local demagogues in the Northwestern States, has succeeded to a considerable extent in deluding the people of that region into a general belief that, should we succeed in our struggle for independence, it is the intention of the Government and people of the Confederate States to shut them out from the free navigation of the Mississippi River and its great tributaries; and though the Provisional Congress of these States long ago emphatically negatived this idea by well-known acts of formal legislation, yet your committee is assured that the delusion on this subject still continues to exist among the people of the Northwest, and that the gross misapprehension in regard to the intentions and policy of the Confederate States of America, thus engendered and kept in existence by wicked and designing men, has operated most effectively in prompting the people of the Northwestern States (so closely connected with the South heretofore, both by geographical and political ties) to contribute freely both in men and money to the prosecution of a war which, if successful on the part of those with whom it has originated, would be eventually as disastrous in its effects to the people of the Northwestern States themselves as to those of the Confederate States of America. It is gratifying to discover that high-spirited and intelligent public men in several of the Northwestern States have of late become exceedingly active in their endeavors to discourage and suppress the ferocious war spirit heretofore raging among their fellow-citizens, and that their honest and patriotic efforts have been already attended with the most marked success. Such a proclamation as that recommended in the resolutions referred to this committee, it is confidently believed, would have a tendency greatly to strengthen the efforts of the advocates of peace in the Northwestern States, be calculated to bring those States quickly into amicable relations with the States of the South, withdraw them ultimately altogether from their present injurious political connection with the States of the North and East, with which they have really so little in common, and thus enable us to dictate the terms of a just and honorable peace from the great commercial emporiums of that region through whose influence mainly has this wicked and unnatural war been thus far kept in progress.

All of which is most respectfully submitted.

H. S. FOOTE, Chairman.

Resolutions.

"Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the true policy of the present war imperatively requires that the movements of our armies in the field should everywhere be as active and aggressive as would be at all consistent with a sound and enlightened discretion, striking at the forces of the enemy boldly and vigorously wherever they may be found on Southern soil, and delaying nowhere long enough to allow to our merciless foes an opportunity of devastating the most fertile districts of the South, and perchance of ultimately obtaining reinforcements which may make it difficult to drive them beyond our confines without such an expenditure of the precious blood of our patriot soldiery as would not be now necessary for their expulsion or capture."

Amended, as proposed, the second and third resolutions will read as follows, viz:

"Resolved, That should the deluded Government at Washington still obstinately continue to refuse us peace, it is the evident policy of the Confederate Government to invade the country of the enemy, with a view to obtaining complete 'indemnity for the past and security for the future.'

"Resolved, That the President be requested, if consistent with his own views of propriety, at such time as he shall deem most appropriate, to address a formal proclamation to the inhabitants of the Northwestern States, embodying the acts of the Provisional Congress relating to this subject, proposing to guarantee to the citizens of all said States resident upon the border of said (the Mississippi) river and its tributaries, as shall not be at war at the time with the Confederate States, in the most effectual and satisfactory mode, the peaceful navigation of the said river and its tributaries; and it is further requested of the President that he will also make known, in said proclamation, the willingness of the Government and people of the Confederate States to enter hereafter into a reciprocity commercial treaty or treaties with any one or more of them."

On motion of Mr. Foote, the consideration of the same was postponed, ordered to be printed, and placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. Barksdale, by consent, from the minority of the same committee, reported as follows, to wit:

Minority report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, beg leave to dissent from the report of the majority upon certain resolutions referred to the committee touching the conduct of the war and recommending the issuing by the President of a proclamation to the inhabitants of the Northwestern States, tendering to them the free navigation of the Mississippi River and advantageous treaty stipulations at the close of the war.

It is submitted that subjects relating to the conduct of the war are not appropriate matters of investigation by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. But, waiving this consideration, the undersigned totally dissent from the views of the majority touching the duties of this House. It is a work of supererogation for this body to undertake to decide, and to declare, the mode of conducting the war. It is a question involving consequences of vital moment, legitimately pertaining to the functions of the Executive and those who have been chosen to lead our armies. But, if such duty were in fact devolved upon this body, as is implied by the report of the majority, it would be in violation of all the rules of enlightened warfare to unfold the plan which it is designed to pursue in the prosecution of the war.

It is believed that thus far the Executive has availed himself of the means placed at his disposal for conducting the war in the manner most judicious and effective, and that in the signal success which has attended our struggle for the maintenance of the independence of the Confederate States will be found sufficient reason for leaving him, without interference, to the exercise of the duties imposed by the Constitution.

The undersigned dissent from the recommendation that this Government should tender to a portion of the citizens of the Government with whom we are at war exclusive commercial privileges. It is not the part of wisdom to commit our Government to any fixed policy in advance. Legislation should not be anticipated, but should be shaped by existing events. If a deviation from this plain suggestion of wisdom be advised in the present instance upon the idea of the influence of an appeal to the self-interest of the inhabitants of the Northwestern States, it should not be forgotten that the same argument might with equal propriety be addressed to the inhabitants of the New England States. The manufacturers of that section would be conciliated by pledges that a discriminating tariff would, at the close of hostilities, be put into speedy operation for building up their interests; and shipowners would be propitiated by pledges that they would be permitted to perform the carrying trade of the South as under the old Union; and the city of New York would be induced to pause in her course of folly and wickedness toward the Confederate States if assured that they would confer upon her the privilege of conducting their commercial affairs and enriching herself upon the proceeds of their labor.

The Northern people derived, under the former Government, an annual profit of not less than $100,000,000 upon Southern trade. Their implements of war will be laid aside when assured that their coffers shall be filled with the proceeds of Southern labor. But the undersigned do not hesitate to repel the suggestion that the people of the South are willing to purchase peace by such a sacrifice of their rights and by so degrading a concession to Northern cupidity. To be respected, our course must be firm and our legislation rational and just.

At an early period after the organization of the Government of the Confederate States a law was passed declaring the free navigation of the Mississippi River, with certain salutary restrictions. The policy of the Government has not been changed on this subject. It is presumed to have been known to the inhabitants of the Northwestern States before they embarked in a wicked and unjustifiable war against the people of the Confederate States. To proclaim this policy at the present time, coupled with offers of lucrative trade, in the manner suggested by the majority, would be in the highest degree derogatory to the dignity of this Government. It would bring upon it the imputation of pusillanimity. It would be accepted by the enemy as a confession of conscious weakness, and its inevitable tendency would be to prolong the war.

The undersigned are firm in the opinion that the most effective mode of conquering a peace is not to be found in extending to the enemy propositions of reconciliation, but in the vigorous prosecution of the war.

The signs of returning reason, indicating a desire for peace among the inhabitants of the Northwestern States, upon the discovery of which the majority have congratulated the House, are believed to be delusive. The undersigned regret to say that they have not been able to discern them. But in the event of the actual existence of these alleged pacific indications, it is clear that they are the result, not of temporizing expedients on the part of the Government of the Confederate States, but of its manifestation of purpose to prosecute the war with vigor and effect.

For these reasons the undersigned dissent from the views of the majority, and ask the concurrence of the House in the opinion that they should be rejected.

E. BARKSDALE.
J. R. McLEAN.
W. R. SMITH.

which was read, ordered to be printed, and placed upon the Calendar.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the special order, which was a bill to exempt certain persons from service in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States.

Mr. Machen moved that the consideration of the special order be postponed until after the reception of the bill from the Senate on the same subject; which was agreed to.

Mr. Chambers moved that the House take up for consideration his motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to empower quartermasters and assistant quartermasters to administer oaths in certain cases, was passed.

Mr. Royston demanded the question; which was ordered.

Mr. Jones moved to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was lost, and the motion of Mr. Chambers was agreed to.

Mr. Harris moved that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Sexton moved to amend the first section of the bill; which is as follows, to wit:

That in all cases when it is necessary to administer oaths to officers or privates, the quartermaster or assistant quartermasters shall have power, ex officio, to administer oaths, by inserting after the word "privates" the words "in order that they may be enabled to draw the pay to which they may be entitled," and insert after the words "assistant quartermasters" the words "making out such payment," and insert after the word "administer," in the last line, the word "such."

Mr. Smith of North Carolina moved to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

That the oath required to enable sick, wounded, or other soldiers to receive their pay may be taken before any quartermaster, who is hereby authorized to administer the same, or before any justice of the peace having jurisdiction, or any other officer having the right by the laws of the State to administer oaths.

The amendment of Mr. Sexton was agreed to.

Mr. Kenner of Louisiana demanded the question; which was ordered, and the amendment of Mr. Smith of North Carolina was agreed to.

Mr. Chambliss moved to amend the bill by adding thereto the following, to wit:

Provided, That no quartermaster or assistant quartermaster shall pay out money on affidavits made before himself.

The amendment was lost, and the bill as amended was engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

The question then being on the title of the bill,

Mr. Machen moved to amend the same by striking out all of the original and inserting as follows, to wit:

A bill to be entitled "An act to authorize certain persons to administer oaths in certain cases;"

The Chair submitted the following construction of the rule of the House adopted on the 28th of August, 1862, viz:

That the resolution restricting debates, which was adopted by this House on the 28th of August, 1862, shall be construed to mean that no member, without the consent of a majority of the House, shall speak more than once on the different readings and passage of any bill or joint resolution, but the privilege shall be reserved to any member, notwithstanding he may have spoken as above stated, to speak once on any question of amendment, reconsideration, commitment, etc., which arises on any bill or resolution.

The question being on sustaining the construction of the Chair,

Mr. Conrad demanded the yeas and nays;

So the construction of the Chair was sustained in the construction of the rule.

Mr. Wright of Georgia moved a suspension of the rules to enable the Committee on the Medical Department to make a report, and demanded the yeas and nays thereon;

Are recorded as follows, to wit: { Yeas..... 56

Mr. Strickland called for the question; which was ordered.

Mr. Swan moved to reconsider the vote by which the question was ordered.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. Atkins demanded the previous question; which was ordered, and the bill was engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

A message was received from the President, by his Private Secretary, Mr. Harrison.

A message was also received from the Senate, by their Secretary, Mr. Nash; which is as follows, to wit:

Mr. Speaker: The Senate have passed a bill of the following title, viz:

H. R. 11. An act to provide for the payment of certain claims against the Confederate States in the State of Missouri.

On motion of Mr. Machen,

Mr. Conrad, also from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution in relation to promotions in the Navy, made the following report:

The Committee on Naval Affairs have had under consideration the following resolution, referred to them by this House:

Whereas the recent action under the late law of Congress of promoting officers "out of turn" has resulted in creating great discontent among many gallant and meritorious officers in the Navy, and is considered injurious to the best interests of the service: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the necessity or expediency of repealing, or in some suitable manner modifying, the law passed at the last session of Congress in regard to "promotions in the Navy," and beg leave respectfully to report:

That the law referred to (that of 21st April, 1862, ch. 68) creates one new grade (that of admiral) and several additional officers in each of the grades heretofore existing in the service. It further provides that "all the admirals, four of the captains, five of the commanders, twenty of the first lieutenants, and five of the second lieutenants shall be appointed 'solely for gallant or meritorious conduct during the war.'"

Although the resolution does not specify the precise nature of the complaints referred to, the committee are warranted in assuming that they were caused by this last clause in the law; in other words, that many officers object that promotions in the Navy should be made "for gallant or meritorious conduct."

The committee can not perceive the justice of this complaint.

A navy is designed as a means of public defense. In examining the expediency of a law which relates to it, therefore, the first question to be asked is, not when it will affect individuals, but how it will operate on the public service. Now, it will be admitted on all hands that the strongest incentive that can be held out to "gallant or meritorious conduct in an officer" is the hope of promotion; yet, strange to say, prior to the enactment of the law referred to, no such incentive was held out to the officers of the Navy, and if it were repealed none would now be held out. While, in the Army, talent, energy, courage, and good conduct are sure, ultimately, to lead to promotion, no such avenue to distinction was open in the naval service. There but one pathway to promotion was to be found, viz: the death or resignation of a superior officer. All others were closed by the inexorable rule of seniority. The rarest talent—the most gallant exploits—the most distinguished services, could not advance him one step in his professional career, and a grateful country could confer on him no other reward than the expression of its gratitude.

A system better calculated to extinguish every spark of emulation, and to repress the aspirations of generous ambition, could scarcely be conceived.

Nor was it less injurious to the public service than it was unjust to the meritorious officer. When the rule of promotion by seniority alone is rigidly adhered to, it must often happen that officers of the least merit have the highest rank, and on the other hand that officers of the most exalted merit may be low down on the ladder. Now, as by another rule of the service not less inflexible, every command must be proportioned to the rank of the commanding officer, it follows that the most important commands may often devolve on the most incapable officer.

Such a system might be tolerated in a time of peace, or in a country whose naval supremacy might enable it to get along with any system, however defective, but it is ill adapted to a country like ours, struggling to create a navy in the midst of a war with a great naval power. On the contrary, the system we should adopt is that which enables the Government to place every man in the position he is best qualified to fill.

This was the object of the law of April 21. It seems to the committee that a law which opens the door of promotion equally to all, affords no just ground of complaint to any, and that the only persons who ought to complain of a law which proposes to reward merit are those who have no merit to reward.

If, as is alleged in the resolution, the execution of the law had given just ground of complaint, this would be the fault not of the law itself, but of those whose duty it is to carry it into effect. With a view of ascertaining what the action of the Executive had been, the committee, through its chairman, addressed a note to the honorable Secretary of the Navy—the answer to this note is hereto appended. It shows the action of the Executive under the act; whether that action affords any just cause of complaint it is for the House to determine.

The committee will only add, that so far from thinking the promotions under the law of 21st of April have been too numerous, they are of opinion that the just claims of several officers have been overlooked.

For these reasons the committee are of opinion that the law of 21st April, 1862, ought not to be repealed.

No modification of the law has been suggested, and the committee have none to recommend, and beg to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution referred to them.

On motion of Mr. Chilton, the report was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

SECRET SESSION.

The House being in secret session, a message was received from the President, by his Private Secretary, Mr. Harrison, informing the House that on the 19th instant the President had approved and signed an act to authorize an issue of Confederate States bonds to meet a contract made by the Secretary of the Navy for six ironclad vessels of war, and steam engines and boilers.

Mr. Perkins, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution relating to the recall of foreign ministers, etc., made the following report:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of requesting the President of the Confederate States [to recall] the commissioners sent by this Government to certain European States, and to notify all foreign powers whose consuls reside in the Confederate States and are accredited to the Government of the United States, that such persons will not be recognized by the Government of the Confederate States as exercising any of the powers or having any of the functions of consuls within the limits of the Confederate States unless appointed by their respective governments as consuls to the Confederate States of America," beg leave to report:

That in the absence of any reference to foreign affairs in the message of the President on the opening of Congress, and without access to the archives of the State Department, your committee deemed it due the importance of the subject submitted to them, and respect for the House, by whom they were charged with its examination, to report that they were uninformed on the matter before them, and to request the Executive by a resolution of the House to communicate to Congress such facts regarding the number and character of our foreign agents as could be made known without detriment to the public service.

The House accordingly adopted the following resolution of inquiry:

"Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, the number and names of all persons engaged in the service of the Confederate States in foreign countries, either as diplomatic, consular, or commercial agents, or in any other capacity, stating the places to which they have been sent, the date of their appointment, the salaries they receive, the duties they are expected to discharge, and how far such agents have been officially or otherwise recognized by any foreign government. Also what are the number and character of foreign agents, whether consular, commercial, or other, known to our Government, representing in any capacity foreign governments, within the limits of the Confederate States, and whether in communicating with this Government, they do so under an exequatur from our Government or that of the United States; also whether said agents are subordinate or subject to the control and direction in any way, and to what degree, of the ministers of their respective countries accredited to and residing in the United States, and the President be further requested to communicate such instructions as may have been given to our foreign agents and such correspondence as may have been had with other governments, either through the Secretary of State or our commissioners abroad, as will aid Congress in its legislation regarding foreign nations and their citizens residing in our midst."

To this resolution the following response was received on the 16th instant from the State Department, and was referred to this committee:

"CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

"Richmond, September 15, 1862.

"The Secretary of State, to whom was referred a certain resolution of the House of Representatives adopted on the 1st instant, has the honor to report to the President:

"That it would be impossible to communicate to the House, without very grave detriment to the public interest, the number and names of all persons engaged in the service of the Confederate States in foreign countries, 'either as diplomatic, consular, or commercial agents, or in any other capacity, stating the places to which they have been sent, the date of their appointment, the salaries they receive, the duties they are expected to discharge.' It is presumed that the House is acquainted with the particulars called for in the foregoing extract from the resolution, so far as diplomatic agents are concerned, but a tabular statement marked 'A' hereto annexed may prove convenient for reference. During the pendency of hostilities the very objects for which other than diplomatic agents have been sent abroad would be exposed to defeat by divulging the details called for in the resolution; and these objects are of great national importance.

"The resolution further inquires how far the agents aforesaid 'have been officially or otherwise recognized by any foreign government.'

"The extracts of the correspondence of the Department hereto annexed marked 'B' furnish the only information on this subject contained in official communications.

"The resolution further inquires as to 'number and character of foreign agents, whether consular, commercial, or other, known to our Government, representing in any capacity foreign governments, within the limits of the Confederate States, and whether in communicating with this Government, they do so under an exequatur from our own Government or that of the United States.'

"The annexed list marked 'C' shows the names of the only agents of foreign governments known by the Department within the limits of the Confederate States.

"All of these agents but one had been recognized by the Government of the United States by exequatur as the duly authorized agents of the foreign governments by which they were respectively appointed, at a period antecedent to that when the several Confederate States revoked the powers previously delegated to the United States, and under which the Government of the United States controlled the relations, whether diplomatic or commercial, which grew up between those States and foreign countries.

"According to well-recognized principles, both of public and private law, these agents of foreign governments having been recognized as such by the agent of the several Confederate States prior to the revocation of the powers delegated to that agent, remained so recognized after the revocation. It was and is undoubtedly within the power of this Government, as it is within the power of all governments, to decline permitting the above-mentioned agents to remain within our limits, but for obvious reasons the exercise of such a power has been deemed unwise and impolitic. The one agent who is excepted from these remarks is Ernst Raven, esq., who was appointed consul for the State of Texas by his highness the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and who applied to this Government for an exequatur on the 30th of July, 1861.

"It is proper to add that a short time ago it came accidentally to the knowledge of the Department that a certain Baron de Saint André had assumed the functions of consul or consular agent for the French Government at the port of Charleston since the establishment of the Confederate Government and without applying for an exequatur to this Department. But just at a time this information was received intelligence was also received that Baron Saint André had left Charleston with his family for the United States with the probable intention of returning in the autumn. In the event of such return, proper action will be promptly taken by the Department to repress the offensive assumption of consular functions by a foreign agent without the sanction of this Government.

"The resolution further inquires 'whether said agents are subordinate or subject to the control and direction in any way, and to what degree, of the ministers of their respective countries accredited [to] and residing in the United States.' The Department has no information on this subject, but it is thought not improbable that the instructions sent by foreign governments to their consular agents within the Confederacy are transmitted through diplomatic agents residing in Washington. It is not thought probable that the foreign consuls within the Confederacy are under the control and direction of foreign ministers accredited to the United States in any other manner than is above indicated, but no positive information on the subject has reached the Department.

"It is known to the Department that the foreign consuls within the Confederacy communicate with their governments in Europe by sending dispatches to the care of the ministers of their respective governments residing in Washington; and the Department has thus been enabled on different occasions to cause correct information to reach foreign countries on matters which it was highly important to the public interest should be widely disseminated and properly understood.

"The resolution of the House further requests the President 'to communicate such instructions as may have been given to our foreign agents and such correspondence as may have been had with other governments, either through the Secretary of State or our commissioners abroad, as will aid Congress in its legislation regarding foreign nations and their citizens residing in our midst.'

"The accompanying document marked 'B' contains all the communications called for not hitherto submitted to Congress except such as can not for the present be divulged without injury to the public service.

"Respectfully submitted.

'J. P. BENJAMIN,
Secretary of State.

"To the PRESIDENT."

Your committee have examined this letter of the Secretary of State with the documents accompanying it, and are not prepared upon the data furnished to recommend either the adoption or rejection of the original proposition submitted to them, and without entering at length into the reasons which have induced this conclusion, state briefly that the facts communicated are so limited and of such a character as to have aided them but little in their investigation. They consist simply in a statement already known to the country of the names of our commissioners and their secretaries abroad, with some extracts from their correspondence and instructions from the State Department, accompanied by an incomplete list of the agents of foreign governments residing in our midst.

Your committee feel well assured that it was not the desire of the House to trench in any manner upon the province of the Senate as the constitutional adviser of the Executive in matters relating to foreign affairs by the adoption of its resolution of inquiry; nor is there any disposition to complain of the Executive exercising a just discretion in withholding the communication of such facts in relation to foreign affairs and our secret agents abroad as he may deem detrimental to the public interest to make. Your committee feel, however, that as the recognition of our independence by foreign powers has not yet been secured, nor our foreign relations established with other governments, and as it is by virtue of direct legislation on the subject and not merely of a constitutional provision, the President has felt himself authorized to send commissioners and commercial agents abroad, and as Congress has before it for legislation matters affecting our commercial relations with other governments and the security of the rights of our citizens abroad and those of foreigners in our midst, this House in no way transcends its powers when it seeks of the Executive, through the proper channel, a knowledge not only of the number and names of our diplomatic agents, but also a statement of the fact whether consular or commercial agents have been sent abroad, and if so, to what countries; and whether they have been permitted by the governments to which they have been sent to exercise the customary powers of such agents, or have been forced to forego entirely the discharge of the very important duties pertaining to such appointments, and made to occupy the character of extraordinary or special or secret agents.

The necessity of such information is apparent to the discussion of the resolution before the House in its twofold character: first, whether it would be politic to recall our commissioners sent to European States; and second, whether it would be wise to refuse to recognize the consular agents of other governments openly exercising their privileges in our midst under an exequatur from a government with which we are at war.

Without further remark upon the reserve of the State Department on this subject your committee will merely add they are not allowed to be ignorant of the fact made known by the published official correspondence of foreign governments and the debates in the British Parliament, that some such agents of our Government in some capacity, either consular or commercial, do exist abroad; but of their number, or the countries to which they have been sent, or the powers they are permitted to exercise your committee are ignorant, and the communication of the Secretary of State gives no information on the subject. We are, however, made incidentally aware of the fact that a regular correspondence is carried on between the consuls of foreign powers residing in our midst and the ministers of those powers accredited and residing at Washington, through a regular established channel of communication which the United States Government has succeeded in inducing those governments, notwithstanding the remonstrance of our Secretary of State, to close effectually against all correspondence of our Government with its agents abroad.

It is also made known by the communication from the State Department that one of our commissioners, Mr. Rost, has resigned his position, and that before doing so he submitted to the President whether it was consistent with our self-respect and the dignity of the country "to keep longer abroad commissioners who are under no circumstances to be received or listened to."

Another, Mr. Mason, dated June 23, writes: "I have conferred frequently and freely with Mr. Slidell on the expediency of making a renewed request to the Governments of France and England, or to either, for recognition of our independence, and I am happy to say that a cordial understanding exists between us to act independently or simultaneously as our joint judgments may approve. My own strong conviction is that it will be unwise if not unbecoming in the attitude of the ministry here to make such a request now unless it were presented as a demand of right, and if refused, as I little doubt it would be, to follow the refusal by a note stating that I did not consider it compatible with the dignity of my Government and perhaps with my own self-respect to remain any longer in England, but should retire to the Continent to await the further instructions of the Government there. I do not mean to say that I contemplate such an immediate step, but only if the demand be made and refused, to remain longer in England as the representative of the Government, would seem to acknowledge the position of a suppliant, and therefore the step is not to be taken without the most grave and mature deliberation.

"I have earnestly consulted the judicious and enlightened friends here among the public men who are earnestly with us, and they advise against a renewed demand at present, while they admit it might place me under such necessity."

Our other commissioners express themselves less decidedly, but no one of them seems to anticipate our early recognition, though all unite in the expression of the confident belief that had it not been for the fall of New Orleans, with the consequent loss of the Mississippi River, we would have been before this recognized by foreign powers.

Your committee, in conclusion, repeat that, without recommending either the adoption or rejection of the resolution submitted to them, are of the opinion that it would be, under present circumstances, unwise for this House to advise the immediate recall of our commissioners, uninformed as it is what other agents of communication with foreign powers would remain to us abroad, as what may be the possible result of recent events upon the disposition or policy of foreign governments, nor would they recommend the dismissal from our midst of the consuls of foreign nations, except in the event of their persisting to discharge their duties under exequaturs from the Government of the United States, without any reciprocal right of consular protection being extended to our citizens visiting or residing and owning property in the countries they represent.

On motion, leave was granted Mr. Smith of Alabama to make a minority report on the same subject.

And on motion of Mr. Foote,

The House resolved itself into open session.

Mr. Atkins moved that the contestant be allowed to speak one hour and that the sitting member be allowed the same time in which to reply, and that the House then proceed to take the vote upon the question; which was agreed to.

A message was received from the Senate; which is as follows, to wit:

Mr. Chilton offered the following resolution:

Whereas the Committee of Elections have excluded all the proof that was offered in the contested election by J. P. Johnson of the seat occupied in this House by A. H. Garland, and yet said proof, if properly taken and submitted, has an important bearing in said contest: Therefore,

SECRET SESSION

The House being in secret session,

Mr. Smith of Alabama submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on a resolution of the House relative to recall of commissioners abroad, etc.; which is as follows, to wit:

Minority report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, presented by Mr. Smith of Alabama.

The undersigned members of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, to which was referred certain resolutions introduced into the House, touching the propriety of "recalling our commissioners to foreign powers, and of expelling those persons acting within the limits of the Confederate States as foreign consuls," not being able to agree with the majority of the said committee, and being unwilling to indorse their report, beg leave to present this minority report.

As it seems to us that the report of the majority reflects by implication upon the President of the Confederate States, and upon the Secretary of State, the undersigned deem it due to themselves and to the House to refer to such portions of the documents laid before the committee as will serve to place the subject in its proper light before the House.

In order that the committee might be enabled to act most advisedly on the subject, the House at the committee's request adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House the number and names of all persons engaged in the service of the Confederate States in foreign countries, either as diplomatic, consular, or commercial agents, or in any other capacity, stating the places to which they have been sent, the date of their appointment, the salaries they receive, the duties they are expected to discharge, and how far they have been officially or otherwise recognized by any foreign government. Also the number and character of foreign agents, whether consular, commercial, or other, known to our Government, representing in any capacity foreign governments, within the limits of the Confederate States, and whether in communicating with this Government, they do so under an exequatur from our own Government or that of the United States, and whether they are subordinate or subject to the control and direction in any way, and to what degree, of the ministers of their respective countries accredited to and residing in the United States.

"The President is further respectfully requested to communicate such instructions as may have been given our foreign agents and such correspondence as may have been had with other governments, either through the Secretary of State or our commissioners abroad, as will aid Congress in its legislation regarding foreign nations and their citizens residing in our midst."

In response to these resolutions, the President submitted to the House an answer, consisting of a vast amount of information, which was referred to the committee, and by them examined. This answer was deemed unsatisfactory by the majority of the committee, as shown by their report. The complaint of the majority seems to be based upon the idea that the answers to the resolutions are not sufficiently full and explicit. Let us examine this objection.

The House resolutions called only for such information as could be communicated not incompatible with the public interest.

Who is to be the judge—who is to decide what statements should be made public? Certainly not the House nor the committee, but the President and his adviser, the Secretary of State. According to the theory upon which our Government is based, the Secretary of State stands at the head of the Cabinet. He is the President's chief adviser. He is the keeper of the secrets of the State, and to his enlightened judgment is committed the important discretion of publication.

The President was advised by the terms of the resolutions not to communicate anything, the publication of which would, in his opinion, be incompatible with the public interest. And thus, by the legitimate interpretation of the resolutions themselves, he was bound to conclude that whatever he did communicate might be made public at the discretion of the House.

We admit and claim that the Committee on Foreign Affairs is entitled to the confidence of the President, but not to an unlimited extent; and we do not believe that any committee of this House has a right to demand from him the possession of State secrets, when, in his opinion, these secrets ought not to be made public.

The committee did not request the information as a committee. The inquiry was preferred by the House; and, whatever information the answer might have disclosed, must, under the resolutions, be given to the House; and the House could publish or not, as a majority might determine. And it must not be forgotten that the inquiry itself was upon a subject which, from its very nature, belongs less to the House than to the President and the Senate. Diplomacy is a peculiar science; its very life is secrecy. It should always be crowned with the Helmet of Pluto, "which maketh the politic man go invisible."

The report of the majority, though guarded and courteous in its phraseology, is nevertheless a complaint that the President has not communicated all the facts requested. We come to this conclusion from the expressions of regret that it contains, and its attempted argument, that, in making the inquiry, the House had not desired to trench upon the peculiar province of the Senate, nor had transcended its own powers.

Here is the argument of the majority: "This House in no way transcends its powers when it seeks of the Executive, through the proper channel, a knowledge not only of the number and names of our diplomatic agents, but also a statement of the fact whether consular or commercial agents have been sent abroad, and if so, to what countries; and whether they have been permitted by the governments to which they have been sent to exercise the customary powers of such agents, or have been forced to forego entirely the discharge of the very important duties pertaining to such appointments, and made to occupy the character of extraordinary or special or secret agents."

If, by the use of the word "powers" in the foregoing extract, we are to understand that it occupies the place of a synonym to the word "right," we do not admit the proposition; the very contrary is true. In this connection it must not be forgotten that the resolution of inquiry requested the President to communicate the "number and names of all persons engaged in the service of the Confederate States in foreign countries, either as diplomatic, consular, or commercial agents, or in any other capacity, stating the places to which they have been sent, the date of their appointment, the salaries they receive, the duties they are expected to discharge, and how far they have been officially or otherwise recognized by any foreign government."

This argument of the majority that the House has not transcended its power must be held to embrace the foregoing broad and sweeping interrogatory.

As a political proposition it is certainly true that every government has the undoubted right, especially in times of war, to have secret diplomatic, commercial, and consular agents. If the Government had this undoubted right it can not be deprived of it by any one of its coordinate branches. It is impossible that the Government and one branch of the Congress should have the same "power," if the existence of the one is inconsistent with the existence of the other; and for a government to reveal the names, number, and functions of its secret agents is at once to destroy that power, for they would no longer be secret agents.

Many of the commercial, diplomatic, and other agents now abroad were appointed in the first year of the Government, under the strictest secrecy; and Congress has repeatedly recognized the power of the Government to have secret agents, and has indorsed their appointment by appropriating money for the payment of their salaries.

It will be seen by an examination of the communication that the Secretary has given the names and localities of our principal diplomatic agents, together with his instruction to them, but that he has not communicated all the names, localities, and functions of others than the diplomatic agents. And the Secretary says that "It would be impossible to communicate to the House, without great detriment to the public interest, the names and number of all persons engaged in the service of the Confederate States in foreign countries, either as diplomatic, commercial, or consular agents, or in any other capacity, stating the places to which they have been sent, the date of their appointment, the salaries they receive, the duties which they are expected to discharge."

On this subject the Secretary adds: "During the pendency of hostilities the very objects for which other than diplomatic agents have been sent abroad would be exposed to defeat by divulging the details called for in the resolutions; and these objects are of great national importance."

The undersigned recognize the force of these observations.

Can it be supposed that a Government whose pride it has been to develop its mightiest energies in the prosecution of this war of subjugation at home, could have failed to have established abroad a system of espionage with detectives to track our foreign agents and to thwart their enterprises? We may well suppose, on the contrary, that wherever a ship may be built or purchased, wherever a gun or a pound of powder may be obtained, there are the agents of the United States to be found. Experience has proven this, and wherever abroad Southern sympathy exists, there in particular this swarm of secret emissaries may be supposed to congregate. Would not a revelation of the number, names, and functions of our secret agents, under such circumstances, endanger the success of their respective missions?

And shall the Secretary of State be expected to step aside from his high duty, even to answer the most solemn inquiry of a Congressional committee? We think not.

Among the many subjects of interest which the communication of the Secretary of State discloses we quote passages from the letters of Commissioners Mason and Slidell, bearing especially upon the subject of the original resolutions. Upon the subject of recognition Mr. Mason says: "I am in full and frequent communication here with many able and influential members of the House of Commons, who confer with me in perfect frankness and candor, and who are prepared to move the question in the House whenever it may be found expedient, but in the attitude of parties here (meaning the ministerial and opposition), as the ministry will not move, it is not deemed prudent to enable it to make the question an issue with the opposition, and so motions that have been projected 'hang fire.'"

"As far as the public is concerned, all agree that there has been a complete change in sentiment as the war goes on. Both my own intercourse—which is becoming large—and information derived from all quarters satisfy me that the educated and enlightened classes are in full sympathy with us, and are becoming impatient at the supineness of the Government."

Mr. Slidell says, speaking of his interview with ———: "In reply to my suggestions that the war could only be brought to a close by the intervention of European powers, which should be preceded by our recognition and a renewed proffer of mediation, he said that 'France could not act without the cooperation of England,' but that within the last few days there seemed to be a change in the tone of the English cabinet; that if New Orleans had not fallen our recognition could not have been much longer delayed; but that even after that disaster, if we obtained decided successes in Virginia and Tennessee, or could hold the enemy at bay a month or two, the same result would follow."

Mr. Mason also refers to this opinion, that if New Orleans had not fallen our recognition would not have been much longer delayed.

Thus the undersigned show through this correspondence that the state of things now actually exist in this country which, in the opinion of our commissioners, would have probably secured our recognition in England and France, for we have not only kept the enemy at bay a month or two, but have obtained decided successes in Virginia and Tennessee. If the fall of New Orleans prevented recognition, as we are bound to believe from the opinions of our commissioners, may we not now expect such a reaction in the minds of European powers as will produce the best feeling in our behalf? To-day, while we are discussing the propriety of recalling our commissioners, it may be that the French and British cabinets, driven by our recent glorious victories, have already decreed our recognition.

What is the fall of New Orleans, disastrous as it was, when we have driven off a vast beleaguering army from the precincts of our capital and pursued the fugitives to their gates; when Washington and not Richmond is threatened; when a veteran army, crowned with twenty successive victories and led by generals whose fame is yet unsullied by a single defeat, triumphantly erect their standards in the valleys and on the hills of an amazed and discomfited enemy. If, after such developments as these, such demonstrations of an ability to maintain our own independence, the courts of Europe should still stubbornly refuse to proclaim our rights and to invite us to participate upon terms of perfect equality at their diplomatic boards, that policy which would be petulance in us now may well assume the majestic proportions of national indignation, and Christendom would then applaud a resolution on our part to scorn those nations which had too sullenly denied our association.

As to the merits of that part of the original resolution referring to our commissioners, the undersigned are of opinion that we have done, as a nation, precisely as we ought to have done. Guided by the custom of ages, we sent commissioners abroad to proclaim that we had dissolved the political bands that connected us with the United States, and that we claimed a place amongst the independent powers of the earth.

This we did with modesty and dignity. To send other commissioners would be unbecoming, and to recall those we have already sent would be an exhibition of impatience which the world would interpret as petulance.

In regard to persons claiming to act as consuls for foreign powers in the Confederacy, the Secretary of State submits the following remarks:

"The annexed list marked 'C' shows the names of the only agents of foreign governments known by the Department within the limits of the Confederate States. All of these agents, except one, had been recognized by the Government of the United States by exequaturs as the duly authorized agents of the foreign governments by which they were respectively appointed, at a period antecedent to that when the several Confederate States revoked the powers previously delegated to the United States, and under which the Government of the United States controlled the relations, whether diplomatic or commercial, which grew up between those States and foreign countries."

The Secretary adds:

"According to well-recognized principles, both of public and private law, the agents of foreign governments having been recognized as such by the agent of the several Confederate States prior to the revocation of the power delegated to that agent, remain so recognized after the revocation. It was and is undoubtedly within the power of this Government, as it is within that of all governments, to decline permitting the above-mentioned agents to remain within our limits, but for obvious reasons the exercise of such power has been deemed unwise and impolitic. It is known to the Department that the foreign consuls within the Confederacy communicate with their governments in Europe by sending dispatches to the care of the ministers of their respective governments residing in Washington; and this Department has thus been enabled on different occasions to cause correct information to reach foreign countries on matters which it was highly important to the public interest should be widely disseminated and properly understood."

The undersigned cordially indorse the wisdom of these suggestions and the propriety of the policy therein indicated. In the present irregular condition of our commercial affairs, arising from the blockade of our ports, these persons may well be permitted to remain at their posts without strict formality, doing no harm to us, and often affording channels of information and communication which we might not otherwise readily obtain. The few truths that have reached Europe of the eventful occurrences of the war, within our borders, have been communicated through these persons. They have promptly contradicted the exaggerated statements of our foes, and charity compels us to suppose that while some of them may be unfriendly to us, yet a vast majority of them are at least sufficiently friendly to make to their respective governments the most favorable and impartial reports of the actual condition of things within the Confederate States.

While we admit and complain that the powers of Europe have been slow to be convinced of our right to be received into the fraternity of nations, we can not deny that they advised us in the earliest days of our struggle that, while recognition was impossible then, still, as soon as we had demonstrated our ability to maintain the independence we had declared, we should be recognized. This was their ultimatum. They had a right to make it. They are the judges. We must bide our time. Every nation is the keeper of its own fortunes, the dictator of its own policy, and we have no right to thrust our quarrels upon it. It would be unbecoming in us to be importunate, especially when we can approach only the precincts of foreign courts, for importunity in claiming favors is the basest suppliance.

The resolutions of the House further inquire how far the agents aforesaid have been officially or otherwise recognized by foreign governments. To this question the Secretary gives all the information contained in the diplomatic correspondence now in the Department.

For these and other reasons the undersigned are of opinion that the communication of the President in answer to the resolutions of the House contains information as full and explicit as the circumstances authorized.

We therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient, at this time, to take any legislative action on the resolutions originally introduced on the subject of recalling our Commissioners, and dismissing from the limits of the Confederacy such persons as are supposed or known to act as consuls for foreign countries in the Confederate States.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

On motion of Mr. Foote, the House resolved itself into secret session; and having spent some time therein, again resolved itself into open session;

When, on motion,

The House adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

SECRET SESSION.

The House being in secret session, the Chair laid before the House a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

The resolution passed by the House in secret session on the 30th of last month has been communicated to me by the Clerk of the House, and it is in the following words:

"Resolved, That the President be requested to cause the Department of State to ask for and transmit to this House estimates of the expenses incident to the sending of a diplomatic agent (supplied with such instructions as he shall deem most wise and proper) to the court of His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, and such other South-American States as he shall suppose to be judicious to open diplomatic intercourse with."

I deeply regret that, according to my view of constitutional duty, it is not in my power to comply with this request of the House. The Constitution expressly vests in the Executive Department the discretion of asking for such supplies as are deemed necessary to carry on the Government, and this discretion can not, with a due regard to the provisions of that instrument, be controlled by the request of the Congress, still less by that of one branch of the legislative department. The ninth paragraph of section 9, Article I, of the Constitution, declares that "Congress shall appropriate no money from the Treasury except by a vote of two-thirds of both Houses, taken by yeas and nays, unless it be asked and estimated for by some one of the heads of Departments and submitted to Congress by the President." It seems too clear for argument that this clause of the Constitution would be completely without effect if the Executive should yield to the request of either House or of both Houses combined "to cause a Department to ask for and transmit" an estimate for any purpose whatever. The design of the framers of the Constitution in inserting this new clause (not to be found in the Constitution under which the Confederate States were formerly united) is well known. It was determined that on the Executive Department of the Government should rest the responsibility of unwise and extravagant expenditures; while the legislative department not only retained the control over the grant of the appropriations, but was vested with power to compel the expenditure of money for purposes not recommended by the Executive, provided a vote of the two Houses equal to that which is necessary for overruling an Executive veto could be obtained. If I should yield my consent to the request of the House now under consideration, the plain effect would be to concur in the establishment of a precedent by which the House and [sic] require the expenditure of a sum not asked for by the head of a Department, nor submitted by the President, by a vote of a bare majority, instead of the vote of two-thirds, by yeas and nays.

While thus unable to comply with the request of the House so far as to cause the Department of State to ask for and transmit the estimate desired, a statement is submitted herewith for your information of the annual cost of each diplomatic mission sent abroad. It is also proper to add that the number of commissioners already authorized by law, and the amount of appropriations asked for by the Department of State, are sufficient for all the purposes suggested in the resolution without any further legislation on the subject.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

RICHMOND, VA., October 1, 1862.

FORTIETH DAY—FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The Chair presented a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

RICHMOND, VA., October 2, 1862.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Chair also presented a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

I herewith transmit a communication from the Postmaster-General, to which I respectfully call your attention.

The seventh clause of the eighth section of the Constitution directs that after the 1st of March, 1863, the expenses of the postal service shall be paid out of its revenue.

The interruption of commerce and communication resulting from the war and the occupation of a portion of our territory by the enemy have necessarily curtailed to a considerable extent the revenues of the Department and rendered it impossible, while the war continues and these causes exist, to make its revenues cover its expenses without such a reduction of the service as would seriously affect the interests of the people of the Confederate States.

If, in your opinion, the clause of the Constitution above referred to merely directs that Congress shall pass such laws as may be best calculated to make the postal service self-sustaining, and does not prohibit the appropriation of money to meet deficiencies, the question is one of easy solution. But if, on the contrary, you should consider that the constitutional provision is a positive and unqualified prohibition against any appropriation from the Treasury to aid the operations of the Post-Office Department, it is for you to determine whether the difficulty can be overcome by a further increase of the rates of postage or by other constitutional means.

Doubtful as to the true intent of the Constitution, I submit the question to the Congress and ask for it the deliberation which its importance may claim.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

A resolution that the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed to report immediately a bill for the purpose of raising a sufficient sum to meet the accruing interest upon the whole interest-bearing debt of this Government heretofore created, and such as may be contracted hereafter previous to the 1st day of January, 1863; which was read, and Mr. Foote moved to amend the same by adding thereto the following:

that the committee be instructed to insert in said bill a clause making Treasury notes a legal tender for the payment of debts, both to the Government and individuals.

Mr. Jones, being in the chair, ruled the amendment out of order, as irrelevant.

Mr. Foote appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the question being, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? The same was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. Johnston moved to amend by striking out all of the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

House at the earliest moment practicable, for its consideration, a tax bill embracing property, business, and incomes, which will yield at least fifty millions of dollars of revenue.

Mr. Boyce moved to amend the amendment by striking out all of the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

FORTY-THIRD DAY—TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Reed.

The Chair laid before the House a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

RICHMOND, VA., October 6, 1862.

I herewith transmit for your consideration a communication from the Postmaster-General, submitting certain estimates.

I recommend an appropriation of the amount for the purposes specified.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Chair also presented a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the House of Representatives of the Confederate States of America:

I return herewith without my approval an act which originated in your body entitled "An act for the establishment and organization of the Provisional Army of the Confederate States of America," approved March 6, 1861.

The act requires revision as an error exists in the title, there being no such act on the statute book as that recited in the title.

There is also an inconsistency between the first and second sections, which is probably the result of inadvertence or haste.

The first section seems to refer to the Permanent Army, and the second to the Provisional Army.

I therefore return the act for such action as you may deem proper to take in relation to the errors above mentioned.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

And whenever the Army, or such part thereof as aforesaid, shall be encamped in any county in any State not within ten miles of any city or town, the President may, in like manner, proclaim martial law within said camp and the surrounding country for ten miles.

Sec. 2. If the encampment of the Army or such portion of it as aforesaid be so far distant from the seat of government, or the emergency be so great that the President can not be communicated with and his reply received in time to meet the exigency of the case, in the opinion of the commanding officer, then said commanding officer may establish martial law in said encampment and surrounding country for ten miles as aforesaid, to continue for the space of ten days, of which he shall immediately apprise the President, and at the expiration of ten days the said law shall expire or be continued in force as the President shall determine.

Sec. 3. If any portion of the territory of the Confederate States, or either of them, shall be invaded or be in danger of being invaded by the enemy, the President may, if in his opinion the public interest require it, proclaim and establish martial law in the place or district actually invaded or in danger of invasion and the country surrounding the same for twenty miles in every direction.

Sec. 4. Martial law shall not be established at one time for a period of more than ninety days, but the President may, if in his opinion it be necessary to do so for the causes before mentioned, by his proclamation, setting forth such necessity, continue it from time to time, for not more than ninety days each time, until such necessity shall cease to exist.

Sec. 5. When martial law has been proclaimed and established, the writ of habeas corpus shall be suspended within the district over which the martial law prevails, if, in the opinion of the President, it shall be necessary to suspend it, and all trials by jury in civil cases shall be also suspended, except in cases concerning rents, actions of detinue, and writs of unlawful entry and detainer, and no judgment or decree for the payment of money shall be rendered against any officer or soldier in actual service in the Army of the Confederate States, except in the cases before mentioned, while he continues in the Army.

Sec. 6. The President shall cause to be prepared a proper system of regulations defining all offenses against martial law, and prescribing the punishment thereof, and establishing courts-martial for the trial of offenders against the same, which courts may consist of one or three persons, who may be officers of the Army, or citizens not in the Army, or both, as the President may determine, whose compensation shall be fixed by the President, not exceeding ten dollars per day for every day the court may be employed, and be paid out of the Treasury upon the order of the Secretary of War; which regulation shall be published with the proclamation establishing martial law, or as soon after as practicable, and filed also in the Departments of War and Justice: Provided, That the said courts shall not have the power to confiscate the property of any citizen, whether soldier or sailor, or not, for any offense except by reasonable fine, or pronounce or inflict the sentence of death upon any man except for a strictly military offense committed by an officer or soldier or sailor, now punishable by death.

Sec. 7. The members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States, and their officers and the heads of Departments, judges of the Confederate courts, and judges of the State courts, shall not be subject to martial law.

Sec. 8. Whenever the President shall have good cause to believe that any citizen, not an officer, soldier, or sailor in the Army or Navy, is engaged in or preparing to commit any treasonable act, or is endeavoring by any means to hinder or embarrass the Confederate Government, or any of its generals, in the conduct of the war, or is or has been dealing in any manner with the enemy, or endeavoring by any means to bring about a restoration of the Union formerly existing with the Government of which Abraham Lincoln is now President, he may cause him or her to be arrested and confined without bail or mainprize until he can be examined by one of the courts hereinbefore mentioned and created, upon the charges which may be made against him or her, and as to such person the writ of habeas corpus shall be suspended. As soon as conveniently may be after the arrest, such person shall be brought before one of the tribunals aforesaid, by whom the charges against him or her shall be examined in private or publicly as he may deem best, securing to the prisoner the benefit of all testimony which he or she may call for, and allowing him or her the benefit of counsel, all the facts found upon which examination, with the opinion of the tribunal upon them, shall be certified to the Department of Justice. If the charges be of actual treason and well founded, in the opinion of the court, the prisoner shall be turned over to the civil authorities to be dealt with according to law. If the charge be of disloyalty and a design to commit treason, or to do any act with a view to restore the Union with the Government of which Abraham Lincoln is the President, or that the prisoner has been dealing in any manner with the enemy to the prejudice of the Confederate States, the prisoner shall be examined in manner aforesaid, and the testimony, together with the opinion of the court upon it, shall be certified to the Department of Justice. If, in the opinion of the court, the charge against the accused was unfounded, he or she shall be discharged. If, in the opinion of the court, the charge was well founded and the public interest demands the detention of the accused, he or she shall be detained in close custody until peace is proclaimed, unless sooner discharged by the President; and as to such prisoner the writ of habeas corpus shall be suspended.

SEC. 9. When martial law shall be proclaimed in any city or corporate town, the military authority shall not interfere with the municipal government of the city or town, except as hereinbefore directed, unless requested by the municipal authorities to do so, but shall furnish all necessary military aid to the said authorities when requested by them to do so, for the purpose of enforcing police laws and regulations and preserving peace and good order.

SEC. 10. Under martial law the military authority shall have no right to interfere with the sale of any goods or commodities among citizens not in the Army, or to regulate or attempt to regulate the price of provisions or commodities of any kind; but it may make such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary for the government of the soldiers, and may regulate or prohibit intercourse and trading with the soldiers and prescribe such penalties for violating the same as may be deemed necessary, subject to the approval of the President.

SEC. 11. This act shall continue in force during the war unless sooner repealed.

Mr. Gartrell demanded the previous question.

Pending which,

The House adjourned.

And on motion,

The House resolved itself into open session.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY—THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1862.

OPEN SESSION.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Reed.

Mr. Ayer, from the Special Committee on the War Tax, reported

A bill supplemental to an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay district collectors in certain cases; which was read the first and second times, and the question being on the postponement of the same and placing it upon the Calendar, the same was decided in the negative, and the bill was taken up.

The Chair laid before the House a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the fiscal affairs of our Government, and invite for its statements your special attention.

The propriety of providing for the payment of every loan or use of Government credit by an adequate tax is too obvious to require argument.

Though the day of payment may be postponed, as to some extent in the conduct of great wars it must, still there must be such assurance of future payment as to maintain the credit of the Government, or there will be a consequent depreciation of its currency and a proportionate increase of the burthen which the people must have hereafter to bear.

I trust it will be possible for the wisdom of Congress in some manner to secure the result sought for in the propositions submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,

Richmond, October 8, 1862.

On motion, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The Chair also presented a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,

Richmond, October 8, 1862.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States of America:

The near approach of the day fixed for your adjournment induces me to renew certain recommendations made at the commencement of the session, and for which legislation has not yet provided. The subject of the efficiency of the Army is one of paramount importance, and the letter of the Secretary of War herewith submitted has been elicited by correspondence with the generals of our armies in the field, whose practical experience of the evils resulting from the defects in our present system entitles their opinion to great weight.

An army without discipline and instruction can not be relied on for purposes of defense, still less for operations in an enemy's country. It is in vain to add men and munitions unless we can at the same time give to the aggregated mass the character and capacity of soldiers. The discipline and instruction required for its efficiency can not be imparted without competent officers. No power now exists by law for securing such officers to fill vacancies when elections and promotions fail to accomplish the object.

Extreme cases ought not to furnish a rule, yet some provision should be made to meet evils, even exceptional, in a matter so vitally affecting the safety of your troops. Tender consideration for worthless and incompetent officers is but another name for cruelty toward the brave men who fall sacrifices to these defects of their leaders. It is not difficult to devise a proper mode of obviating this evil. The law authorizes the refusal to promote officers who are found incompetent to fill vacancies and the promotion of their juniors in their stead; but instances occur in which no officer remaining in a regiment is fit to be promoted to the grade of colonel, and no officer remaining in a company is competent to command it as captain. Legislation providing for the selection, in such cases, of competent officers from other regiments of the same State affords a ready remedy for this evil, as well as for the case when officers elected are found unfit for the positions to which they may be chosen. This selection can be made in such manner as may seem to Congress most advisable; but this or some other remedy is indispensable for filling numerous vacancies now existing.

While this deficiency of competent officers exists in some cases, there is a large excess in others. Numerous regiments and companies have been so reduced by the casualties of war, by sickness and other causes, as to be comparatively useless under the present organization. There are companies in the Army in which the number of officers exceeds that of privates present for duty, and regiments in which the number of such privates does not exceed that which is required for a single effective company. The cost of supporting the Army, already a very heavy burden on the resources of the country, is thus increased to an extravagant extent. But this is of secondary importance compared with the inefficiency which results from this condition of things. Some legislation which shall provide for the consolidation of companies and regiments when thus reduced in numbers, and where conscripts can not be obtained from a State in sufficient numbers for filling the ranks, is of pressing necessity; and a deep sense of duty impels me to repeat that no consideration for the officers who may be unfortunately deprived of commands ought or can safely be permitted to obstruct this salutary reform.

It may be proper to remark that the necessity for this consolidation and the consequent discharging of tried and meritorious officers will obviously be increased by all legislative action permitting new organizations to be formed of men who by the provisions of the conscript law were directed to be incorporated into existing companies and regiments.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., October 4, 1862.

President Confederate States of America:

SIR: I deem it my duty to call your attention, before the adjournment of Congress, to the want of power in the Executive to make appointments where neither election nor promotion secures competent officers to fill vacancies, and to consolidate companies and regiments reduced by casualties of service below the numbers necessary for efficiency. The absence of this power is a defect in the organization of our service so great that it must ultimately cause disaster, if not ruin.

The present condition of the Army of Northern Virginia imperatively requires its exercise, and the experience of the commanding general of that army has been unable to devise any expedient by which he may avoid the alternative of violating law or of exposing his army to ruin.

The senior general of our armies, whose opinion is entitled to great respect, from his familiar acquaintance with the military organizations of this continent during the last forty-five years, fully concurs with the Department as to the indispensable necessity of the proposed power.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. RANDOLPH,
Secretary of War.

On motion, the message was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Elliott, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported as follows, to wit:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the application of Elias C. Boudinot to a seat on the floor of Congress as a Delegate from the Cherokee Nation, have duly considered the same and report that after a full examination of said Boudinot's credentials they are of opinion that he has been duly elected Delegate from the Cherokee Nation in conformity with the treaty between the Confederate States of America and the Cherokee Nation, and is therefore entitled to his seat as Delegate aforesaid; they therefore report the following resolution.

They further report a bill to fix the pay and mileage of Delegates from the several Indian nations in treaty alliance with this Government.

The question being on agreeing to the resolution of the committee; which is as follows, to wit:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That Elias C. Boudinot is entitled to a seat in the Hall of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the Confederate States of America as Delegate from the Cherokee Nation of Indians for the following purposes only: To propose and introduce measures for the benefit of said nation, and to be heard in regard thereto, and on other questions in which the said nation is particularly interested.

The same was agreed to, and Mr. Boudinot, being present, came forward, was duly qualified, and took his seat.

The House then took up the bill reported by Mr. Elliott, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to be entitled

The Congress of the Confederate States do enact, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to reduce the rate of interest on all bonds and certificates of stock to be issued after the first day of December next, to a rate per annum not exceeding six per cent, payable semiannually, and all Treasury notes issued after the said first day of December shall be fundable only in the said bonds or stock issued at such reduced rate: Provided, however, That this reduction shall not include any bonds or stock which are required to meet any contracts made before the date aforesaid, or any Treasury notes which shall then have been issued,

Mr. Garnett moved to amend the same by striking out all down to the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States do enact, That all Treasury notes issued after the first day of December next shall be made fundable only in bonds bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, but in all other respects similar to the bonds bearing eight per cent interest.

Mr. Russell moved to amend the same by striking out the word "six" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven."

Mr. Jones called the question; which was ordered, and the amendment of Mr. Russell was lost.

Mr. Foote called for the previous question.

The call was not sustained.

Mr. Kenner called the question; which was ordered, and the amendment of Mr. Garnett was agreed to.

Mr. Garnett moved to amend by striking out the proviso to the first section, and thereupon called the question; which was ordered, and the amendment was agreed to.

to wit:

open session; when the House took a recess until 7.30 o'clock p. m.; and having again met took up the special order, which was

A bill to purge the Army of ignorant and incompetent officers.

The bill having been read as follows, to wit:

Whereas the efficiency of our Army and the health and comfort of our soldiers in the field depend upon the skill, competence, and attention to duty of the officers in the service; and

Whereas it is well known that many of the officers of the Army are ignorant of their duties, inefficient in their discharge, and utterly careless of the health and comfort of their men: Therefore,

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That whenever, in the judgment of the general commanding a department, the good of the service and the efficiency of his command require it, he is authorized, and it is hereby made his duty, to appoint an examining board, to be composed of officers of a rank at least as high as that of the officers whose qualifications it is proposed to inquire into, which board shall immediately proceed to examine into the cases of such officers as may be brought to their attention, for the purpose of determining their qualifications for the discharge of the duties properly appertaining to their several positions.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That whenever such examining board shall determine that any officer is clearly unfit to perform his legitimate and proper duties, or careless and inattentive in their discharge, then the said board shall communicate their decision, together with a full report of their proceedings in the case, to the general commanding the department in which the examination shall have been held, who shall, if he approve the finding of the board, be authorized to suspend the officer who has been pronounced unfit for his position, and shall immediately transmit to the Secretary of War the decision and proceedings of the examining board, with its own action and opinion indorsed thereon.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War, if he approve the finding of the Board and the action of the general commanding the department, shall lay the same before the President, who is authorized to retire honorably or to drop from the Army, as the circumstances of the case may warrant, and the good of the service require, the officer who has been found unfit for his position.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That in order to secure reliable information of the efficiency and competence of officers, it is hereby made the duty of each officer commanding a regiment, separate battalion, company, battery, or squadron, to make to his immediate commanding officer, who shall transmit the same to the brigadier-general commanding, a monthly report, in tabular form, containing a list of all commissioned officers of such regiment, separate battalion, company, battery, or squadron, in which shall be stated the number of days each officer has been absent from his command, with or without, or on sick leave; the number of times each officer has been observed to have been absent from his command when on march or in action; when and where each officer has been observed to have performed signal acts of service; when and where negligent in the performance of duty and inattentive to the security and economy of public property.

Mr. Miles moved to amend the same by adding as an additional section the following, to wit:

Be it further enacted, That when any officer of a company, battalion, squadron, or regiment shall have been dropped or honorably retired in accordance with the provisions of this act, then the officer next in rank shall be promoted to the vacancy if competent, and if not competent, then the next officer in rank shall be promoted; and so on until all the commissioned officers of the company, battalion, squadron, or regiment shall have been gone through with; and if there be no officer of the company, battalion, squadron, or regiment competent to fill the vacancy, then the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, fill the same by appointment: Provided, That the officer appointed shall be from the same State as that to which the company, battalion, squadron, or regiment belongs: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as limiting the power heretofore conferred upon the President by existing laws to fill any vacancy by the promotion of officers or the appointment of privates "distinguished in the service by the exhibition of extraordinary valor and skill."

Mr. Baldwin moved to amend the second section by striking out the words "or careless and inattentive in their discharge."

Mr. Garnett called the question, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. Sexton moved to amend the same by inserting after the word "or" the word "habitually."

Mr. Gartrell moved to amend the same by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That such officer shall be entitled to be heard, and call witnesses in his defense.

Messages were received from the President, by his Private Secretary, Mr. Harrison; which are as follows, to wit:

RICHMOND, VA., October 11, 1862.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a communication from the Secretary of War in response to your resolution of the 9th instant in reference to the disbanding of Wheat's battalion, of Louisiana.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., October 11, 1862.

President Confederate States of America.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to me of the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

"Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the House by what authority and in virtue of what law Wheat's battalion of Louisiana (which was mustered into the service for the war) was disbanded and the officers thereof put out of commission."

The authority to disband Wheat's battalion is to be found in the Articles of War, the Army Regulations, and the articles of enlistment.

The Provisional Congress by special enactment adopted the Articles of War and authorized the President to prescribe regulations for the Army which, when promulgated, were to have the force of law. See acts of the Provisional Congress, No. 52, sections 26 and 29. The eleventh article of war authorizes the President to discharge noncommissioned officers and privates before the expiration of their term of service, and also to discharge commissioned officers.

The nineteenth article of the Army Regulations, promulgated by order of the President, authorizes the discharge of enlisted men before the expiration of their term of enlistment by the War Department, by a general court-martial, or by the commander of a department, or an army in the field.

The discharge is not only authorized by law, but also by the articles of enlistment, which require the soldier to serve a specified time, unless sooner discharged.

The discharge of the noncommissioned officers and privates disbands the corps, and the line officers being elected or appointed for the corps necessarily go out of commission when the corps is disbanded. If this were not a legal consequence of the discharge of the men, the President by virtue of the eleventh article of war might also discharge the officers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. RANDOLPH,
Secretary of War.

A message was received from the Senate, by the Secretary, Mr. Nash; which is as follows, viz:

Mr. Speaker: The Senate have passed a bill of the following title, viz:

S. 127. An act to authorize the President to make certain appointments during the recess of the Senate;

In which I am directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Mr. Elliott, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled and ready for the signature of the Speaker

A bill to be entitled "An act amendatory of an act entitled 'An act providing for the granting of bounties and furloughs to privates and noncommissioned officers in the Provisional Army,' approved December eleventh, eighteen hundred and sixty-one;"

Also, an act supplemental to an act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay district collectors in certain cases," approved April 11, 1862; and

plies of medicines, needed as well for suffering women, children, and captive enemies as for the sick of our armies; and perpetrating other atrocities which would be disgraceful to savages; and

Whereas the said Federal Government, in the same spirit of barbarous ferocity, has recently enacted a law entitled "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes," and has thereby made manifest that the vast war of invasion which it wages with such lawless cruelty is waged with a view, by judicial murders, banishments, and otherwise, to exterminate the loyal population of these States, to transfer their property to their enemies, and to emancipate their slaves, employing slaves and other negroes for these purposes, with an atrocious design of adding servile insurrection and the massacre of families to the calamities of war; and

Whereas, since the passage of said act, executive and military orders have evinced a determined purpose of the enemy to carry out the policy of rapine and extermination with brutal and surprising severity; and

Whereas, manifestly with the knowledge and connivance of said Federal Government, and for the purpose of destroying the credit and circulation of the Treasury notes of this Government, immense amounts of spurious or counterfeit notes, purporting to be such Treasury notes, have been fabricated and advertised for sale in the enemy's country and have been brought into these States and put in circulation by persons in the service of the enemy; and

Whereas this Government has hitherto observed, and yet desires to observe, with scrupulous fidelity, all the obligations of a belligerent power, according to international laws and usages, although fairly absolved from such obligation toward the enemy by the refusal of the enemy to acknowledge or perform any reciprocal obligation unless constrained by necessity; and

Whereas justice and humanity require this Government to endeavor to repress the lawless and atrocious practices of the enemy by inflicting severe retribution for inhuman crimes; and

Whereas it is deemed proper to declare the views of this Government respecting certain practices of the enemy: Therefore,

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the following acts, when committed by the enemy, or any person in the service of the enemy during the war, shall be deemed unlawful, to wit:

I. The arrest, detention, or other molestation of any loyal inhabitant of the Confederate States for refusing to aid the enemy or to take an oath of allegiance to said Federal Government, or any government or pretended government adhering thereto, or for any cause or alleged cause implying that said Federal Government is entitled to exercise political jurisdiction over the people of these States, or for any other cause not sufficient according to the laws and usages of war between independent nations.

II. Attempting to enforce the above-recited act of said Federal Congress.

III. Circulating or bringing into the Confederate States counterfeit notes, purporting to be Treasury notes of this Government.

IV. Taking, removing, consuming, or destroying private property on land not warranted by said laws and usages of war.

V. Employing negroes or mulattoes in military service against the Confederate States, or organizing, arming, or training them for that purpose.

VI. Inciting slaves to rebel; abducting them; aiding or inducing them to abscond; harboring them with intent to deprive the owners of their property therein, or to give effect to any provision of said act of the Federal Congress.

VII. Obstructing the importation of medicines.

VIII. All other acts which are forbidden or condemned by said laws and usages of war.

SEC. 2. For any of the acts hereinbefore declared to be unlawful the President shall have authority to inflict retaliation or retributive injuries upon the enemy at his discretion, either by imprisoning or putting to death captives taken in war, or adult male inhabitants of the enemy's country, or by seizing or destroying public or private property in the enemy's country, or in any other manner which he may deem proper.

SEC. 3. Until the said act of the Federal Congress authorizing the universal confiscation of property and liberation of slaves of the loyal people throughout these States be repealed, and the enemy shall consent to conduct hostilities according to said laws and usages of war, it shall be lawful for the forces of the Confederate States, unless forbidden by the President, to destroy any city or town of the non-slaveholding States of the late Union, giving proper notice and time for the inhabitants to withdraw.

SEC. 4. All slaves taken in arms against the Confederate States shall be delivered to the authorities of the State or States in which they shall be so taken, to be punished, or otherwise dealt with according to the laws of such State or States.

SEC. 5. Every white person who shall act as a commissioned or noncommissioned officer, commanding negroes or mulattoes in arms against the Confederate States, or who shall arm, train, organize, or prepare negroes or mulattoes for military service against the Confederate States, or who shall voluntarily aid negroes or mulattoes in any military enterprise, attack, or conflict, in such service, shall, if captured, be put to death by hanging.

SEC. 6. Every person in the service of the enemy, or adhering to the enemy in the present war, who shall incite a slave to rebel, or abduct a slave, or harbor a slave in the manner before declared unlawful, or assist or entice a slave to abscond from the service, possession, or control of his or her owner or master, shall, if captured, be put to death by hanging.

SEC. 7. All free negroes and mulattoes engaged in military service against the Confederate States, or enlisted or organized for such service, shall, if captured, be slaves for life, and shall be sold according to such regulations as the President shall prescribe.

SEC. 8. Every person who shall do any act in execution or enforcement of the said act of the Federal Congress shall be put to death by hanging.

SEC. 9. Every commissioned officer of the enemy who shall arrest, detain, or molest a loyal inhabitant of any of the Confederate States in the manner hereinbefore declared to be unlawful, or who shall cause the same to be done, or shall permit the same to be done by any person under his authority, shall, if captured, be put to death by hanging.

SEC. 10. Every commissioned officer of the enemy who shall take, remove, consume, or destroy private property on land in the manner hereinbefore declared to be unlawful, or shall cause the same to be done, or shall permit the same to be done by any person under his authority, shall, if captured, be put to death by hanging, or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial shall award.

SEC. 11. Every person in the service of or adhering to the enemy who shall pass or offer to pass any such spurious or counterfeit note or notes as aforesaid, or shall sell or attempt to sell the same, or shall bring any such note or notes into the Confederate States, or shall have any such note or notes in his possession with intent to pass or sell the same, shall, if captured, be put to death by hanging; and every commissioned officer of the enemy who shall permit any offense mentioned in this section to be committed by any person under his authority shall be put to death by hanging.

SEC. 12. Every person charged with an offense punishable under this act shall be tried by a court-martial in such manner and under such regulations as the President shall prescribe; and, after conviction, the President may commute the punishment to imprisonment in such manner and for such time as he may deem proper, and may pardon the offender on such conditions as he may deem proper or unconditional.

Mr. Foster moved that the same be laid upon the table.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Foote moved to amend the bill by striking out all of the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit:

Whereas it is manifest that, despairing of the subjugation of the Confederate States, or any of them, the Congress and President of the United States have deliberately set about the work of inciting the slave population of these States to insurrection by declaring them emancipated from and after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, which action on the part of the said Congress and President is in direct violation of the Constitution which they were sworn to support, in contravention of all law, human and divine, and has been resorted to for the diabolical purpose of involving the slaves and their owners, embracing innocent women and children, in one common ruin, and for the further purpose of maintaining themselves in power by catering to the fanatical spirit of abolitionism; and

Whereas each of the States of this Confederacy have enacted laws punishing with death all persons engaged in inciting the slave population to insurrection or rebellion, and there is much stronger reason for inflicting this penalty upon persons who not only voluntarily conspire to perpetrate this horrible felony, but, in addition thereto, come to devastate our land, burn our dwellings, waste our substance, and murder our citizens: Therefore,

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That so long as the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln, the President of the United States, dated the twenty-second day of September, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, proposing to emancipate the slaves of this Confederacy from and after the first day of January, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-three, shall remain unrevoked, all commissioned officers of the United States Army who shall be seized, captured, taken, or arrested within the limits of this Confederacy after the said first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, shall be deemed and held to have voluntarily entered the Confederate States for the purpose of maintaining said proclamation and of bringing about the result thereby contemplated—of a servile insurrection; and the said officers shall in no wise be regarded or treated as prisoners of war, but as felons; and it shall be the duty of the President to cause to be constituted a sufficient number of courts-martial to try said offenders, and, if condemned, to see that they are promptly executed by being hanged by the neck until they are dead.

SEC. 2. Congress do further enact, That should the aforesaid proclamation of Abraham Lincoln continue unrevoked on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, it shall be the duty of the President of the Confederate States to make proclamation that this act will be strictly enforced.

Mr. Barksdale moved to amend the amendment by striking out all of the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following, to wit, which is the report made by him from the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas the Northern States, now represented by the Federal Government of the late Union, commenced the present war of invasion to enforce an unfounded and tyrannical claim of dominion over sovereign States which had withdrawn from the Union; and, pretending that these States are in rebellion, have sought to deny to them, from the beginning of the war, the rights accorded to belligerents by the usages of nations; and, after prosecuting this war without success more than a year since this Government was recognized by European nations as a belligerent power, have continued, under the same pretext, to inflict upon the good people of these States inhuman injuries, in contemptuous disregard of the usages of civilized warfare, exacting from them treasonable oaths and service, and, upon refusal, subjecting unarmed citizens, women, and children to banishment, imprisonment, and death; wantonly burning their dwelling houses; ravaging the land; murdering men for pretended or trivial offenses; making rapine of private property a systematic object of the war; organizing the abduction of slaves by armies and agents of Government; endeavoring to foment servile insurrection by tampering with slaves, by proclaiming schemes for emancipating them, by passing laws to equalize the races, by protecting slaves in resisting their masters, and by preparing armed bands of negroes to fight, in the presence of negro slaves, for the subjugation of the white race; permitting outrages on women to be committed by a licentious soldiery, encouraged in a memorable instance by the order of a major-general and the acquiescence of his Government; attempting, until restrained by a threat of retaliation, to murder privateersmen for engaging in a mode of warfare expressly sanctioned by the constitutions of the United States and the Confederate States and by the laws of nations; refusing, with double inhumanity, to exchange prisoners until constrained by the long duration and adverse fortune of the war; attempting to ruin our cities by filling up the entrances of their harbors with stone and diverting the ancient channels of great rivers; cutting off our supplies of medicines, needed as well for suffering women, children, and captive enemies as for the sick of our armies, and perpetrating other atrocities which would be disgraceful to savages; and

Whereas the said Government of the United States, in the same spirit of barbarous ferocity, has recently enacted a law entitled "An act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes," and has announced by a proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln, the President thereof, that in pursuance of said law, on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, "all persons held as slaves, within any State or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall be in rebellion against the United States, shall be thenceforward and forever free." And has thereby made manifest that the vast war of invasion which it wages with such lawless cruelty is conducted with a view, by judicial murders, banishments, and otherwise, to exterminate the loyal population of these States, to transfer their property to their enemies, to emancipate their slaves, to destroy their labor system, to subvert the constitutions, human and divine, upon which it is founded, employing slaves and other negroes for these purposes, with an atrocious design of adding servile insurrection and the massacre of families to the calamities of war; and

Whereas, since the passage of said act, executive and military orders have evinced a determined purpose of the enemy to carry out this policy of rapine and extermination with brutal and surprising severity; and

Whereas justice and humanity require the Government of the Confederate States to endeavor to punish and repress the atrocious practices and designs of the enemy by inflicting severe retribution: Therefore,

Resolved by the Congress of the Confederate States, That the President will be sustained in resorting to such measures of retaliation as in his judgment may be demanded by the above-recited lawless and barbarous conduct and designs of the enemy.

Mr. Jones moved a call of the House.

The motion was lost.

The Chair laid before the House a communication from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the House of Representatives of the Confederate States of America:

I regret to find myself compelled to return without my signature an act, which originated in your body, entitled "An act to reorganize and promote the efficiency of the Medical Department of the Provisional Army." I entirely concur in the desire to accomplish the objects contemplated in the act, and have delayed its return in the hope that some additional legislation might obviate the difficulties that would embarrass the operation of the act in its present form.

The act seems to be based on the assumption that there exists a "medical department of the Provisional Army," and this fact is not only set forth in the title, but some of the provisions are so worded as to be inoperative, by reason of this assumption.

Thus, the first section provides "that the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States be, and the same are hereby, conferred on the Surgeon-General of the same." There exists no such officer as the surgeon-general of the Provisional Army. The plain intent, therefore, of Congress to confer the rank of brigadier-general in the Provisional Army on the Surgeon-General of the Permanent Army would be defeated, unless the language of this section be changed.

According to the provisions of the law, as it now stands, there is a medical department organized for the Permanent Army, under the act of the 26th of February, 1861, entitled "An act for the establishment and organization of a general staff for the Army of the Confederate States of America," the chief of which is styled the Surgeon-General. The only legislation providing for medical officers for provisional troops is the ninth section of the act of 6th March, 1861, which enacts that when volunteers or militia are called into the service of the Confederate States in such numbers that the "officers of the Medical Department which may be authorized by law for the regular service, are not sufficient for * * * furnishing them with the requisite medical attendance, it shall be lawful for the President to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Congress, as many additional officers of the said department as the service may require, not exceeding * * * one surgeon, and one assistant surgeon, for each regiment, * * * to continue in service only so long as their services may be required, in connection with the militia or volunteers."

There is an act of 14th August, 1861, on the same subject, but it confines the appointments authorized by it to such surgeons and assistant surgeons as may be necessary for the various hospitals.

The third and fourth sections of the act now returned to you permit and require the assignment of a number of surgeons and assistant surgeons to military departments, to divisions, to brigades, and to infantry and cavalry regiments, largely in excess of the number allowed by the law just quoted, but no authority is given for the appointment of the increased number of medical officers, and it would be impracticable to execute the law unless by adopting the inadmissible construction that an authority to assign officers to duty implies an authority to appoint new officers. Such a construction would be the less justifiable in the present instance, because, in the second section, in which new officers are authorized, the language of the act directs appointments to be made, but in the third and fourth sections the language is changed and assignments only are permitted.

There is another omission in the act, which may give rise to pretensions prejudicial to the service. In declaring the rank to which the several medical officers shall be entitled in the Provisional Army, including those of brigadier-general, colonels, and lieutenant-colonels, no express exclusion is made of their right to command troops, as has wisely been done in the law which regulates their rank in the Regular or Permanent Army. The officers of the Medical Corps have long evinced the desire to have some right of command of troops in certain contingencies, and this command ought either to be expressly forbidden or the cases in which it may be exercised ought to be distinctly defined.

The chief objection to the bill, however, remains to be stated. The fifth section is designed to effect a most humane and desirable object, but its provisions are inadequate to the end proposed. The purpose of Congress is evidently to provide some additional means for the care of the sick and wounded of armies in the field. At present, after each battle, the wounded are necessarily left in such temporary quarters as can be procured in the vicinity, but on the movement of the Army most of the medical officers attached to it are compelled to follow, and the wounded are thus left with medical aid and attendance entirely insufficient for their relief.

The fifth section of the act provides for an infirmary corps of fifty men for each brigade, officered with one first and one second lieutenant, two sergeants, and two corporals, but no provision whatever is made for any additional medical officers, nor does the act provide for any control by medical officers over these infirmary corps, nor assign to these corps any fixed duties. Unless some provision be made on these points the present deficiency of surgical aid will continue to exist, and the infirmary corps will necessarily follow the army to which they are attached when it moves after a battle, or, if left behind, will be subject to the orders only of their own officers, who are not medical men, or conflicts will arise between these officers and the medical officers.

Entertaining the conviction, therefore, that this act in its present form, while entailing heavy expense, will fail in the beneficial effects contemplated by Congress, I deem it my duty to return it without my approval, but with the hope that some additional legislation may be devised to accomplish the purpose contemplated by its passage.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

SECRET SESSION.

The House being in secret session,

Mr. Chambers, from the Committee on Enrollment, reported as correctly enrolled

A bill to be entitled "An act to provide for the building of a vessel of war."

And the Speaker signed the same.

The Chair presented a message from the President; which is as follows, to wit:

To the House of Representatives of the Confederate States of America:

I return herewith unsigned an act for the building of a vessel of war, which originated in your body. This act authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to build, arm, and equip with the least possible delay, if practicable by contract with the inventor, otherwise directly by the Department, one vessel of war on the plan of Robert Creuzbaur, for ocean and river service, drawings of which, with suitable explanations, are deposited in said Department.

On a fair construction of the terms of this act, no discretion is allowed the Secretary to decline building the vessel described, and it will be his duty, if the act becomes a law, to proceed in the construction. The plan proposed by the inventor has been three times examined by different officers of the Navy Department deemed fully competent to decide on such subjects, none of whom have recommended the construction, but have reported "that it is inexpedient to build such vessels at the present time, when the whole available force and materials at the command of the Department should be applied to the construction of vessels of acknowledged efficiency."

In a report by a number of eminent naval officers it is further stated "that nothing has been done to prove the alleged claims to the speed, invulnerability, and efficiency of the vessel in either or all of which we have no confidence."

As it is not probable that Congress was aware of the facts above stated, I deem it my duty to return the bill, in order that you may take such further action on the subject as is deemed by you advisable, and with a full knowledge that the plan proposed is not approved by the Executive Department charged with the supervision of such subjects.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. Herbert moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the third Monday in January next.

Mr. Clapp called the question; which was ordered, and the motion to postpone prevailed.

A message was received from the Senate; by the hands of the Secretary of that body, Mr. Nash; which is as follows, to wit:

The Senate have passed, without amendment, the bill entitled "An act to provide for the defense of the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers."

Mr. Chambers, from the Committee on Enrollment, reported as correctly enrolled

And the Speaker signed the same.

A message was received from the President, by his Private Secretary, Mr. Harrison, informing the House of Representatives that the President had to-day approved and signed

And on motion,

The House resolved itself into open session.
